ВВЕДЕНИЕ

В книге приведены типовые бланки ответов ЕГЭ, а также дана карта индивидуальных достижений обучающегося, которую можно использовать для отслеживания динамики результативности выполнения заданий типовых экзаменационных вариантов.

В процессе подготовки к ЕГЭ по иностранным языкам 2024 года рекомендуется обратить внимание на изменения в КИМ в сравнении с КИМ 2023 года. Уменьшено максимальное количество баллов за выполнение заданий 1, 2, 10 и 11. Максимальный балл за верное выполнение заданий 1 и 11 стал равен 2 баллам, за верное выполнение заданий 2 и 10 — 3 баллам. Максимальный первичный балл за выполнение экзаменационной работы уменьшен с 86 до 82 баллов. Уточнены формулировки заданий 37 и 38 письменной части, а также критерии оценивания задания 37 письменной части.

Файлы с аудиозаписями инструкций и текстов к разделу «Аудирование» ко всем вариантам, цветные иллюстрации к заданиям устной части, а также дополнительные схемы оценивания заданий 37 и 38 письменной части и заданий устной части можно скачать по следующему адресу: <https://files.ege.plus>

ПИСЬМЕННАЯ ЧАСТЬ

Инструкция по выполнению работы

Ответы к заданиям 3–9, 12–18 и 30–36 записываются по приведённому ниже образцу в виде одной цифры, которая соответствует номеру правильного ответа. Эту цифру запишите в поле ответа в тексте работы, а затем перенесите в бланк ответов № 1.

Раздел 4 («Письменная речь») состоит из 2 заданий (37 и 38) и представляет собой небольшую письменную работу (написание электронного личного письма и письменного высказывания с элементами рассуждения на основе таблицы/диаграммы). В бланке ответов № 2 укажите номер задания и запишите ответ к нему.

При выполнении заданий можно пользоваться черновиком. Записи в черновике, а также в тексте контрольных измерительных материалов не учитываются при оценивании работы.

- A. The rose is the most deeply ingrained flower in human history and human culture. It has been immortalised and integrated into music, festivals, poetry and even wars. It has been used as a sign of passion as well as grief. It is also the sign of human love, given on different occasions. William Shakespeare surely immortalised the rose for the world in 1597, in his play “Romeo and Juliet”, when Juliet so passionately said, “What’s in a name? That which we call a rose. By any other name would smell as sweet.”
- B. All species of roses are naturally found throughout the Northern Hemisphere. Some 150 wild species are spread worldwide, from Alaska to Mexico, from Northern Africa to China. All roses are close relatives of cherries, apples, pears, raspberries, and plums. Most species of roses have long been cultivated for their hips, the fruit of the rose flower that has nutritional and medicinal value. A unique characteristic of all species of roses is its ability to bloom over and over again, from early summer to late autumn.
- C. The Romans at first believed that the rose was useful as a source of natural medicines. Soon, the beautiful flowers became necessities at Roman festivals. Roman emperors demanded that their baths be filled with rose water, and they reclined on carpets of rose petals during their feasts. Perfumes made from roses became a high-priority treasure for the ruling elite, and it resulted in hardships among the peasant class, who were forced to grow roses instead of cultivating much needed food.
- D. During the 15th century in England, the rose became the symbol of war between two families, both of whom had laid claim to the English crown. The War of the Roses lasted for 30 years and involved the House of York, whose symbol was the white rose, and the House of Lancaster, whose symbol was the red rose. Only in 1486, King Henry VII of the House of Lancaster, who was the first Tudor king, married Elizabeth of York, uniting the families and finally bringing the English civil war to an end.
- E. In the 17th century, the rose became so valuable across Europe that it — along with rose water — was often used as currency. Roses were used to barter in market places across Europe, and commoners could pay their taxes to kings using roses and rose water. Josephine, wife of the Emperor Napoleon Bonaparte, created a great rose garden on the edge of Paris that contained over 200 varieties of the cherished rose. Most of the roses of Europe at that time were shades of pink or white until the early 19th century.
- F. Roses have always been extremely popular all over the world, and fossil records show the presence of ancient roses in the Tertiary Period, which began about 70 million years ago. Where, exactly, first roses appeared is still unknown. It is often believed that roses were probably first cultivated in the royal gardens of ancient China about 5,000 years ago. In Ur, an ancient city of Mesopotamia, 3,000-year-old clay tablets contain the first known written reference about roses growing in gardens of the city.

- G. Not all plants have perfect flowers. In a botanical sense a perfect flower is the one which has both male and female reproductive parts in the same structure. Lilies, roses, and apple flowers are perfect. Each flower possesses multiple ovaries that are located in a cup-like structure called a hypanthium. Leaves are located alternately on a stem that often has thorns. Five petals are typically found on the natural rose, while modern hybrid roses possess many more of the nice petals. The flower is admired for its wonderful scent.

Slow down climate change

Rising sea levels. Raging storms. Searing heat. Ferocious fires. Severe drought. Punishing floods. The effects of climate change are already threatening our health, our communities, our economy, and our children's future.

What can you do? A whole lot, as it turns out. Americans, on average, produce 21 tons of carbon a year, about four times the global average. Personal action is, of course, no substitute for meaningful government policies. We still must limit carbon pollution and move away from dirty fossil fuels and toward cleaner power.

But it's important to remember the equally vital contributions that can be made by private citizens — which is to say, by you. "Change only happens when individuals take action," says clean energy advocate Emily Dain. "There's no other way, if it doesn't start with people." Here are some easy, effective ways each one of us can make a difference.

First, weatherize. Building heating and cooling are among the biggest uses of energy. Indeed, heating and air-conditioning account for almost half of home energy use. You can make your space more energy efficient by sealing drafts and ensuring it's adequately insulated. In the USA it is possible to claim federal tax credits for many energy efficiency home improvements.

Next, invest in energy-efficient appliances. Since they were first implemented in 1987, efficiency standards for dozens of appliances and products have kept 2.3 billion tons of carbon dioxide out of the air. That's about the same amount as the annual carbon pollution coughed up by nearly 440 million cars. Energy efficiency is the lowest-cost way to reduce emissions. When shopping for refrigerators, washing machines, water heaters, and other appliances, look for the Energy Eco label. It will tell you which of them are the most efficient.

And when you're ready to swap out your old machines, don't just put them on the curb. Recycling an old refrigerator through a special appliance disposal program can prevent an additional 10,000 pounds of carbon pollution because the global-warming pollutants in the refrigerants and foam would be properly captured, rather than vented to the air.

Reduce water waste. Saving water reduces carbon pollution, too. That's because it takes a lot of energy to pump, heat, and treat your water. So take shorter showers, turn off the tap while brushing your teeth, and switch to water-efficient appliances. It is estimated that if just one out of every 100 homes were equipped with water-efficient fixtures, about 100 million kilowatt-hours of electricity per year would be saved.

As for other spheres, eat the food you buy — and compost what you can't. Approximately 10 percent of energy use goes into growing, processing, packaging, and shipping food — about 40 percent of which winds up in a landfill. If you're wasting less food, you're likely cutting down on energy consumption. As for the scraps you can't eat or the leftovers you don't get to, collect them in a compost bin instead of sending them to a landfill where they release methane. Recycling food and other organic waste into compost provides a range of environmental benefits, including improving soil health, decreasing greenhouse gas emissions, recycling nutrients, and mitigating the impact of droughts.

We need to make urgent changes to address the climate crisis — from adapting to the damage we can no longer avoid to preventing the worst-of-the-worst from happening. And while the urgency surrounding climate action should inspire us all into action — so should the progress we're already making.

| 1. Fighting without rules | 5. Unique habits |
| 2. A natural hunter | 6. Most caring mothers |
| 3. Home, sweet home | 7. Asking for protection? |
| 4. What's on the menu? | 8. What's a kangaroo like? |
- A. Most kangaroos live on the continent of Australia, though each species has its own favourite place for living. For example, the musky rat-kangaroo likes to nestle down in little nests on the floor of the rainforests in northeastern Queensland. Gray kangaroos like the forests of Tasmania. The antilopine kangaroo can be found in the eucalyptus woodlands of extreme northern Australia. Small tree-kangaroos live in the upper branches of trees in the rainforests of Queensland, as well as on the island of New Guinea.
- B. Kangaroos are the only large animals that hop to move around. Their springy hind legs and feet are much stronger and larger than their arms. Kangaroos can cover 7 metres in a single hop, and can hop as fast as 48 km/h. When feeding, kangaroos use a slower, walking movement, and for that they use their muscular tail, pushing off the ground as they move along. Kangaroos are social animals. They live in groups called a mob, a herd or a troop. Kangaroos in a mob will groom each other and protect each other from danger.
- C. Probably the best-known fact about kangaroos is that they carry their young in a pouch. A female kangaroo can give birth to up to four offspring at one time, though this is unusual. At birth, the baby, called a joey, can be as small as a grain of rice. When the joey is born, it is guided safely into the comfy pouch, where it develops for another 4 to 15 months. Inside the pouch, the joey is protected and fed with milk. Joeys grow quickly, and at 14 to 20 months for females, or 2 to 4 years for males, they will be fully matured.
- D. According to the Red List of Threatened Species, 16 species of tree-kangaroos and rat-kangaroos are listed as either near-threatened, threatened, vulnerable, endangered or critically endangered. The desert rat-kangaroo and the short-nosed rat-kangaroo are considered completely extinct. Current studies show that global warming could also kill off the world's smallest kangaroo. However, the four species of great kangaroos — the species that are much larger than other kangaroos — are not endangered.
- E. Kangaroos are large marsupials that are found only in Australia. They are identified by their muscular tails, strong back legs, large feet, short fur and long, pointed ears. Like all marsupials — a sub-type of mammal — females have pouches where their young live until they are old enough to emerge. According to National Geographic, the largest kangaroo, as well as the largest marsupial, is the red kangaroo. The smallest kangaroo is the musky rat-kangaroo. It is only 15 to 20 cm long, and weighs 340 grams.
- F. Kangaroos are mainly herbivores. They eat grasses, flowers, leaves, ferns, moss, and even insects. Like cows, kangaroos bring their swallowed food up again to the mouth and re-chew it before it is ready to be totally digested. Great kangaroos mainly roam forests in search of food, though they do go to open grasslands for grazing. Small species, like rat-kangaroos, eat worms, roots, and palm berries. The animal sits on its haunches while eating and finds food by digging. They are solitary, but have been seen feeding together.

G. Large male kangaroos are powerfully built. Like many species in the wild, male kangaroos sometimes fight over potential mates. They often lean back on their sturdy tail and kick each other with their strong hind legs. Kangaroos can also bite and wield sharp claws, which they may do in battle with an enemy, such as a dingo. If a kangaroo suspects that there is some danger in the area, it will stomp its foot on the ground to alert others. If it comes to blows, a kangaroo will skilfully box and kick its opponent.

Should students join clubs on campus?

Student clubs are an important part of the social and emotional development of young adults. Engagement in student organisations and activities can further develop self-awareness, self-management, and foster empathetic connections with others.

I recognize a few downsides to the number of student organisations on my campus, especially in how resume-building opportunities appear to drive these numbers more often than a personal desire to help your community. But that doesn't outweigh the positive impact such memberships can have on social and emotional development for college students and on boosting their soft skills. Soft skills are "people skills" that allow us to effectively interact with others, like communication and work ethic.

Campus clubs are spaces where students are encouraged to be themselves, make potential mistakes, miss deadlines, and use their experiences to grow in a supportive environment. Joining a student organisation presents many opportunities to learn more about yourself, your goals and your strengths. You can learn from how others handle certain situations and test your current knowledge. You can also find out what you're good at, whether that's multitasking, staying organised, generating ideas, or serving others. This self-awareness will be beneficial in your future career.

Some of my peers have mentioned the issue of over-committing when they're pressured to be involved. When classroom work increases and time feels like it's running out, it may feel like there is no other option than to drop a commitment or two. In my experience, many student clubs welcome conversations about needing some time. In spaces run by others who may be struggling with work-life balance, I have never had a club tell me that stepping back isn't an option or that there won't be space for me when I feel ready to return. From sports and wellness focused organisations to cultural, or creative groups, there is space for everyone in a student club on my campus if students choose to seek out those opportunities.

On the other hand, student clubs don't really foster a community. They divide the student base. While student clubs can bring a sense of community to students, oftentimes this creates a problem for students with social anxiety to feel that they can fit in. When there are a lot of different student groups, it can become overwhelming to attempt to fit in with the rest of the crowd.

Many student clubs also require funding in some part from students, or at least investment from students to fully participate in their group, which becomes a factor that may leave those who join the clubs left out.

Some student clubs promote themselves as good job experience for the real world. But resources to help students succeed in life should be available to students from the outside. Additionally, student clubs require a time investment to reach these opportunities. This allows for the attitude of earning one's way to an advantageous position in society when it all comes down to knowing the right person. Thus, the problem of alienation goes beyond how many people someone can know around campus. Shouldn't success be valued on the effort someone makes, and not on the luck of knowing the name of a different person of repute?

If you want to assist the community, seek ways to increase the benefit toward those outside of your set social circle to see how many people the campus community really has that can benefit from your resources — both formal and informal. Student clubs are a great way to contribute, but only if they create an inclusive environment.

- A. Coral reefs are large underwater structures composed of the skeletons of coral. There are hundreds of different species of coral. Coral reefs have a surprising array of shapes and colours, ranging from round, folded brain corals — named for their resemblance to a human brain — to tall, elegant sea whips and sea fans that look like brightly coloured trees or plants. Fringing reefs are the most commonly seen coral reefs, and they grow near coastlines. Barrier reefs are separated from the coastlines by deeper, wider lagoons.
 - B. Corals are found all over the world's oceans, from the Aleutian Islands off the coast of Alaska to the warm tropical waters of the Caribbean Sea. The biggest coral reefs are found in the clear, shallow waters of the tropics and subtropics. The largest of these coral reef systems is the Great Barrier Reef in Australia. It is more than 2,400 kilometres long. Scientists have explored only about 20 percent of the ocean's floor, and they continue to find previously unknown coral reefs that have likely existed for hundreds of years.
 - C. The corals that build reefs are known as hard or reef-building corals. Soft corals, such as sea fans and sea whips, do not produce reefs. The calcium carbonate that is created by hard corals provides a foundation for baby corals to settle upon. And if the local threats to coral reefs are limited, then the corals will build up over time and create a healthy, vibrant coral reef. Other types of animals and plants also contribute to the structure of reefs. For example, algae, seaweed, and sponges add to the architecture of coral reefs.
 - D. The largest coral reef in the world, the Great Barrier Reef, is home to at least 400 individual species of coral and thousands of different species of fish, molluscs, sea snakes, sea turtles, whales, dolphins, birds and more. As with the other coral reefs of the world, this incredible ecological hotspot is under threat. A heat wave in 2016 caused a large percentage of the corals in the Great Barrier Reef to undergo severe bleaching and death. Even in the deeper, less-exposed areas of the reef, nearly 40 percent of the corals had partial bleaching.
 - E. Healthy reefs lead to healthy oceans, and healthy oceans are vital to all life on the planet. The destruction facing not only the Great Barrier Reef, but also every reef around the world, can lead to the extinction of thousands of species of marine life. In turn, coastlines that are currently protected by reefs would more readily be flooded during storms. Some islands and low-lying countries would vanish under the water. Moreover, the highly important and profitable industry that coral reefs provide could collapse.
 - F. The Australian government has put forth a long-term plan to sustain the Great Barrier Reef. The plan outlines efforts to reduce and eventually eliminate dumping materials and chemicals, reduce fishing and poaching, and monitor the water quality. There are also many attempts to rebuild the reef. Scientists are working to breed stronger species of coral that are less sensitive to warmer waters. Another group of ecologists are experimenting with growing corals on steel frames placed over the old parts of the reef.

- G. Coral reefs cover less than 1 percent of the ocean floor. All the reefs combined would equal an area of about 285,000 square km. Nevertheless, they are among the most productive and diverse ecosystems on Earth. About 25 percent of all known marine species consider coral reefs to be their home. Sometimes referred to as “the rainforests of the sea” for their biodiversity, coral reefs are the primary habitat for 4,000 species of fish, 700 species of coral and thousands of other plants and animals.

What I learned from student clubs

At the end of last semester, I was elected president of the Asian Studies Club at my university. It's a pretty cool deal — the school gives us a lot of support to host fun events, like foreign movie nights, happy hours. And special receptions, and we also sponsor speakers to give special talks on Asia-related topics.

It goes without saying that becoming a leader or an officer in a student club will help you develop leadership skills that will be invaluable in all areas of life. Being in different roles, I realised that it requires a combination of leadership, advocacy, and community. And I also learned that managing people is not easy... especially students.

This lesson is probably pretty obvious, but it's something that I didn't fully understand until I experienced it myself. Taking on leadership positions is one of the most intimidating things I've ever done. However, it's also one of the most rewarding experiences, because I learned a lot about the nuances of managing teams, people, and expectations.

First of all, when adopting a leadership role, I struggle in finding the right balance between being "one of the team" and being taken seriously. I always avoid becoming an overly authoritative figure and I try to become super friendly to the people I work with. As a result, people stop taking my deadlines and requests seriously. I used to be scared of imposing real consequences, and I thought I could get things done just by being best friends with my team. I learned the hard way that this does not always work — it is important to set expectations on the very first day of a project and to have tough conversations once in a while.

Additionally, I cannot emphasise how much I came to value the importance of communication. I realised that I am usually the most frustrated when I'm working on projects where communication is lacking. This is when people don't respond to group messages (or when they do, it's very minimal), don't share their concerns or challenges, don't participate in discussions, or are generally just disengaged.

This happens a lot in student clubs (or even class projects). One of the unique challenges of working with students is that they have tons of other things going on, and it's hard to know if the thing you're working together on is even in their priority list. If you've ever worked in student groups, you are probably familiar with people saying something similar to this: "Oh, I'm so sorry. I had a midterm and another homework assignment going on, so I couldn't finish it. Can I do it by next week?"

I realised that I actually don't mind it when my team moves things around to fit their schedule, but this requires communication. I've come to appreciate when people inform me that they have other things that they have to prioritise, and then work out alternatives together with me. This experience made me very conscious of my own communication skills when I have to work with others. I try to keep myself accountable and be on top of communicating my priorities, expectations, and especially challenges to my managers and teammates.

Overall, leading student clubs taught me the importance of setting expectations and communication (and that students are probably the hardest group of people to manage). Nevertheless, I enjoyed identifying people's strengths to build an executive board of students who are truly passionate about change and community. Serving as a leader of a student club presents a visible platform for me to help people bring their best selves to the table and think outside of their comfort zone, as college is a time to discover who you are and what intrigues you.

| 2. Not always healthy | 6. Better than believed |
| 3. New colour and taste | 7. Chocolate: nature risks |
| 4. Chocolate: toxic | 8. Where is chocolate from? |
- A. Chocolate is extracted from the fruit of the cacao tree, which grows exclusively in tropical climates. The cacao tree is native to Central and South America, but once European invaders discovered the delicacy in the 18th century, the popularity of chocolate took off, and farmers soon established plantations in other parts of the world. Today, Ghana, Côte d'Ivoire, Nigeria, Indonesia and Brazil account for around 80% of the world's cacao production. More than half of the chocolate we consume comes from West African countries.
- B. Historically, fine chocolate falls into three main categories: dark chocolate, milk chocolate and white chocolate. Dark chocolate is made with chocolate liquor, cocoa butter, lecithin, sugar and vanilla. Milk chocolate includes the same ingredients as dark chocolate plus milk fats and milk solids. White chocolate is made with the same ingredients as milk chocolate, except it does not include the chocolate liquor. The type of chocolate depends on what ingredients are present and the percentage of cocoa.
- C. For many years, physicians warned against eating too much chocolate — suggesting that its high fat content contributed to acne, caries, obesity, high blood pressure, heart disease and diabetes. However, in recent years, the discovery of antioxidant compounds in chocolate has changed this perception and stimulated research on its potential health benefits. Cocoa has healthy forms of dietary fat in it, and contains minerals important for human health, including potassium, phosphorus, copper, iron, zinc and magnesium.
- D. Cocoa contains high levels of flavonoids, chemicals in plants that are known for their health benefits in humans. Dark chocolate contains especially high amounts of flavonoids, which may be the reason why chocolate consumption has been associated with a decreased risk of heart disease in recent years, according to the 2013 review. Some recent studies have found that regular chocolate consumption is also associated with lower blood pressure, decreased stress levels, increased attention and quick reaction.
- E. Studies that have found beneficial health outcomes related to chocolate consumption have focused on the consumption of dark chocolate, which has less sugar and fat content than milk chocolate. In addition, the studies looked at moderate amounts of chocolate consumption. Like many foods, chocolate is healthiest when eaten in moderation. The sugars and fats added to chocolate make it high in calories, which may lead to weight gain. Many of the protective effects can be negated by overconsumption.
- F. Recently, an up-to-date type of chocolate has been invented — ruby chocolate. This variety of chocolate joined the list in 2017. Barry Callebaut, the world's largest cocoa processing company, developed the pink-hued chocolate by adding a powder that is naturally extracted as cocoa beans are processed to make chocolate. So it is without any flavourings, or additives: it is purely coming out of the cocoa bean. According to its creators, ruby chocolate has a lighter flavour than milk chocolate and is not as sweet.

G. It may be surprising but chocolate production can harm the environment. Farmers often clear forests to make room for cacao plantations. According to the World Wildlife Fund, about 70% of the Ivory Coast's illegal deforestation is related to cacao farming. One danger of deforestation is soil erosion, which can make cultivated land less fertile for cacao plants, creating a vicious cycle. Farmers and scientists are currently working to develop strategies to maintain safe and eco-friendly chocolate production.

Why I write my journal

Before I started writing my bullet journal, I kept asking: “Is it a to-do list, a planner, or a diary?” This was my main question, and I was very annoyed when they told me it was all of these things. But it is all of these things!

I like bullet journaling because it's a great way to track my day-to-day activities, as well as my long-term goals. Planners and to-do lists typically only focus on what you're doing in the future, and diaries typically focus on what you did that day. But all of these things give us a complete picture of who we are. Before I started bullet journaling, the idea of keeping my diary, my personal to-do list, and my work tasks in the same place seemed absurd. But now I understand both how to organise that, and also why it makes sense.

I'm amazed at how many things I left out of my old diaries — I basically just wrote about boys I had crushes on and nothing else. I didn't write nearly enough about my friends, cool things I was reading, or simply what my daily routine was like. Bullet journaling helps you record all of the things that are going on in your life, and makes it easy to keep track of the things you want to do in the future.

It also gives me a space to literally record anything else that doesn't fall into any of these categories — I have used my journals to take notes in class when I forgot my subject notebook, in meetings, in info sessions. I've used it to plan essays and presentations. I even used it as an art journal, where I would draw or just stick random things onto the pages.

However, many might think that journaling is too time-consuming. “How do you keep up with it?”, — this is the question that I get every time I show someone my journals. Yes, it can be time-consuming — if you make it to be. Like the general consensus, I realised quickly that setting up the planner layout at the beginning of every month was too time-consuming, and resorted to use the journal to record all of my random thoughts and ideas before they float away into nothingness. I used it as a combination of a diary, planner, and to-do-lists — where I could write whatever's in my mind and whatever's necessary. Pay attention to the key word: necessary. Don't feel pressured to keep up with a structure and to set aside a time to journal when you don't actually have the time. The journal is yours and it's meant to help you!

The only reason why I've kept up with it for so long is that I've forgotten how to function as well as I do now without one. I honestly need it to sort out all the projects I'm involved in, and to keep myself sane. It's a productivity tool as well as therapy. But I don't always “keep up” with my journal. If I've set aside a page to track my spending, and suddenly I don't feel like that's useful anymore, I'll just abandon it. It's your journal, your rules.

Personally, I write literally everything. I've shamelessly recommended journaling to many people over the past year and many people have told me that they are too scared to write. Some mention that they don't know how to make their pages look pretty. I always say the same thing: it really doesn't need to be pretty for it to be useful. I try to make mine nice to look at because I wanted to be creative with it. It was one of my goals when I started a journal. But if you aren't into aesthetics, feel free to use a pen and a blank journal.

You also don't have to write that much. Why force yourself to write pages and pages if you have nothing to say? Just write down things that you find interesting, and things that you need to write down — like... a grocery list, or, the homework problems given in class. And if you make a mistake, just turn over to a new page and start over. After all, that's the beauty of a blank journal.

| 1. Hard times | 5. Hidden treasure |
| 2. Plants like trees | 6. A difficult task |
| 3. A great discovery | 7. Unseen life diversity |
| 4. Unique small world | 8. Against global warming |
- A. Amazon, Borneo, Congo, and Daintree: everyone knows the names of many of the world's largest or most famous rainforests. And many of us know about the world's largest span of forests — the boreal forests stretching from Russia to Canada. But how many of us could name an underwater forest? Underwater forests are huge kelp and seaweed forests, stretching much further than it was previously realised. Few of them are even named. But their wonderful canopies are home to large numbers of marine species.
- B. Underwater forests are mainly formed by seaweeds, which are types of algae. Like other plants on land, seaweeds grow by capturing solar energy and carbon dioxide through photosynthesis. Seaweeds have long been known to be among the fastest growing plants on the planet. The largest species of seaweeds grow tens of metres deep, forming forest canopies that sway in a never-ending dance as waves move through them. To swim through one is to see patterns of light and shadow, and to get a sense of constant movement.
- C. Seaweed forests face threats from marine heatwaves and climate change. Almost all of the extra heat trapped by greenhouse gases that people have emitted so far has gone into the oceans. This means ocean forests are facing very difficult conditions. Large expanses of ocean forests have recently disappeared off western Australia, eastern Canada and California — resulting in the loss of habitat and carbon storing potential. Unfortunately, the majority of the world's underwater forests are unrecognized and unexplored.
- D. Off the coastline of southern Africa lies the Great African Seaforest, while Australia boasts the Great Southern Reef around its southern reaches. There are many more vast, but unnamed, underwater forests all over the world. So far, it has been very challenging to estimate how large an area ocean forests cover. On land, scientists can easily measure forests by satellite. Underwater, it becomes much more complicated. Most satellites cannot take measurements at the depths where underwater forests are found.
- E. Scientists have found that ocean forests are even more productive than many intensely farmed crops such as wheat, rice and corn. Productivity was highest in temperate regions, which are usually washed by cool, nutrient-rich water. Every year, on average, ocean forests in these regions produce 2 to 11 times more biomass per area than land crops. These findings are encouraging. Such large productivity can be used to help meet the world's future food security. Seaweed farms can supplement food production on land.
- F. Seaweeds are very fast-growing plants. Their fast growth rates mean that seaweeds are hungry for carbon dioxide. As they grow, they pull large quantities of carbon from seawater and the atmosphere. Globally, ocean forests may take up as much carbon as the Amazon. This suggests that underwater forests could play a big role in decreasing the negative effects of climate change. It is not known exactly how much seaweed carbon ends up stored and kept safe naturally. This will be an area of intense research in the future.

G. Underwater seaweeds offer habitat, food and shelter to a wide variety of marine organisms. They are all unique and different. Large species such as sea-bamboo and giant kelp have gas-filled structures that work like little balloons and help them create vast floating canopies. Other species rely on strong stems to stay upright and support their photosynthetic blades. Some other plants that grow in the sea, like golden kelp on the Great Southern Reef in Australia, cover the seafloor, creating an underwater carpet.

Seeing the big picture

In my very first experiences of interning or doing part-time work, I usually get placed at the very bottom of the food chain. One summer I was an administrative assistant, and now I hold a part-time job as an accounts receivable clerk. Since I mostly come inexperienced, I would have to get trained and mentored by the employees there. Most of the time, I get paired with an employee who introduces me to their daily tasks. After a few times experiencing this, and having the position of an outsider who is given a glimpse of the inner workings of a company, I've started to notice something that companies have in common. Most of us are missing the big picture.

As an employee starting a career in a specific company, in a non-decision-making position, we are often given a set of instructions for our daily tasks. These are the things that need to be done (by us) in order for the organisation to run well. It could be creating clippings of real estate advertisements from the newspaper. It might be processing a payment by following a detailed set of instructions. It could be very tedious stuff that might lead you to start to think: "Why am I doing this?"

I completely understand that sometimes there just isn't enough time or resources to explain everything to everyone in the team. But here is why I think understanding the big picture is great for everyone in the organisation.

First and foremost, not understanding the significance of what you are doing kills motivation. When you are stuck repeatedly doing the same things, for weeks and months... no matter how good of an employee you are, you will get bored. Especially if you don't understand the contributions that you are making as you work. When you lose motivation, then the quality of your work will automatically decrease. This is bad not just for you, but for the entire company as well — because now you are inefficient.

On the other hand, if you understand the reasoning behind your tasks why it has to be done, you will feel that you are important to your organisation — that you belong, and that what you do matters. Most of the time, the quality of your work improves if you are motivated.

For example, everyday I have to input the page numbers for the ads in our school paper. It's tedious work. At first, I didn't know why I was doing it, and I was getting frustrated with having to do it every day. After a while, however, I realised that this was important because it was the only way for us to make sure that the ads were there, and that we can always use the page number that we've inputted to track an advertisement from weeks or months ago, when needed (e.g. when a client requests to see a screenshot of the ad as proof.) After realising this, I started to take this daily task more seriously. Well, I didn't become super passionate about it either, but I see the importance.

I feel like entrusting this knowledge to interns, admin-level employees, the newbies in a club, or other similar positions, is beneficial for both the organisation and the individual. By doing this, you are educating them about the bigger things going on at work, and also reminding them that their efforts matter. You are encouraging them to become problem solvers, and to look at things the way you would look at things.

I've seen a lot of people complain every day saying things like, "I don't understand why they can't just do it properly! It's not that hard!" If that's the case, maybe take a step back. You might know how to do it perfectly because you know the big picture. Maybe, they don't know how to do the tasks properly because they're only seeing a small part of the picture, and that's not enough.

12 The jobs the author got as an intern allowed her to...

- 1) find similar features in these organisations.
- 2) see the big picture of the companies' structures.
- 3) get to know good mentors and establish connections.
- 4) share the responsibilities with other employees.

Ответ:

13 The expression tedious stuff in "It could be very tedious stuff" (paragraph 2) most probably refers to...

- 1) detailed instructions.
- 2) boring responsibilities.
- 3) doing your job well.
- 4) important questions.

Ответ:

14 Which is NOT mentioned as a result of lacking "understanding the big picture" in an organisation?

- 1) Employees will be unproductive.
- 2) It will affect the whole company.
- 3) Staff will be less interested in work.
- 4) You will have to repeat the same tasks.

Ответ:

15 The author uses the example with page numbers (paragraph 6) to...

- 1) show how to stop doing boring work.
- 2) prove the benefit of knowing your goals.
- 3) explain how advertising process works.
- 4) encourage the reader to take work more seriously.

Ответ:

16 This in paragraph 6 ("After realising this, I started...") most probably refers to...

- 1) reasons for being upset.
- 2) a client's request.
- 3) the value of the task.
- 4) imputting page numbers.

Ответ:

17 It is implied that if employees understand the reasoning behind their tasks they will...

- 1) understand their employers better.
- 2) change their position faster.
- 3) stay in the company longer.
- 4) continue their education.

Ответ:

What is the main idea of the last paragraph?

- 1) People often like to complain without trying to change things.
- 2) Only those who see the big picture can do their tasks perfectly.
- 3) It is not enough just to know how to do things properly.
- 4) Explaining the importance of tasks to staff improves their work.

- A. Today, Russia is washed by 13 seas. However, this was not always the case. In the 16th century, the country had only been able to directly access the Arctic Ocean and fought a hard battle to establish some sort of a presence in the Baltic Sea. In 1581, during the Livonian War, Swedish forces captured Narva, which was the only large Russian port on the Baltic coast at that time and was of strategic importance to Russia. So, the Russian tsar Ivan IV had nothing left to do but to look to the north.
 - B. In absolute terms, European trade was booming in the 16th century, new trading routes were searched for. It was nearly impossible for Russia to engage in trade with Western Europe in such conditions, but it was absolutely necessary for Russia's continued development. English traders by then had already carved a route to Russian settlements on the shores of the White Sea. However, there were too few local piers for effective trade to take place. A large full-fledged port was required for merchants' ships.
 - C. On March 4, 1583, the tsar ordered the establishment of a city near the Mikhailo-Archangel monastery, located at the mouth of the Northern Dvina River, 30 kilometres from the White Sea. The following year, the New Kholmogory fortress was built there and, from the 17th century onwards, it became known as Arkhangelsk. The fortress was constructed from masts tied together. The most skillful master of carpentry could not have produced anything better. It became Russia's only route into Europe then.
 - D. Arkhangelsk developed rapidly as a city, and there were many good reasons for that. A large sea pier was constructed, as well as trade centres for foreign merchants — so-called Guest Courts. Brits, Dutch and other "Germans" brought imported cloth, velvet, lace, wines, precious stones, gunpowder and cannons, bringing back with them wheat, pork and pork fat, sable, sap and other goods. Almost all of Russia's trade with the West in those days used to be conducted through Arkhangelsk.
 - E. Peter I visited the city in 1693 and came to be rather impressed with what he saw: the amount and variety of foreign ships dazzled the young tsar. On his orders, the shipyard was founded, which oversaw the construction of the Russian trading and naval fleet. On June 25, 1701, at the very start of the Northern War against Sweden, the enemy attempted to take the city, but was crushed in the area near the Novodvinsk fortress, which guarded the approaches. This became the first major Russian victory in that war.
 - F. At the start of his reign, Peter I accomplished a lot for the development of Arkhangelsk, but, in the end, it was also he who bore the blame for the fading glory of this key centre of Russian trade. After the tide of the war turned in Russian favour, the tsar's decrees began deliberately redirecting the flow of trade from Arkhangelsk to St. Petersburg. In 1718, only a third of the exports went through the northern port. And after the war ended, St. Petersburg presided over 100 % of all trade with Western states.

G. Until Peter I fought to create his “window to Europe” through the Baltic Sea, the only window of such kind Russia had ever had was situated in the Arctic Ocean. It was the city of Arkhangelsk. Arkhangelsk has long stopped being the main port in Russia, and the city never served the purpose of the “northern gate” in the country. However, there is one area it never fell behind in — as in the 18th century, the city continues to play a major role in the launching of scientific expeditions into the Arctic Ocean.

College stress

The first time we leave home and start preparing for adult life, college presents intense pressure to achieve high grades and shape successful careers. Students tend to push themselves to the limit both in their academic performance and in their recreational outlets. Yes, being a student can be tough. With the transition to adult life, making new friends and busy schedules for studying college stress is commonplace for most students.

Stress is your body's response to uncomfortable or unfamiliar situations and can surface through a range of physical, emotional, or mental symptoms. The situations that lead to stress can be either negative or positive. Yes, even a high exam score can cause stress among college students, piling on the pressure to maintain the high average!

The important thing to remember about stress is that it should only be temporary; otherwise, it can lead to burnout, or physical and emotional exhaustion. If you find yourself stressed for long periods, first of all, take some time off and do something to distract from the pressure. Here are some other tips on how to reduce it.

One of the most important lessons you can learn during college is to ask for and accept help. Whether from a friend or a professor, being surrounded by a strong support system will help ease the transition into some of the best years of your life.

Admitting what you don't know and studying with a friend could be the difference between a 60 % and 80 % on your next exam. Asking your professor for an extension on your next paper might give you the time you need to write that last page. Try not to put so much weight on every situation and remind yourself that college is a time for clarification and exploration and should be enjoyed.

The next vital tip is to manage your health. Eating healthy food can make a huge impact on alleviating stress and positive thinking. Make sure you avoid fast food and energy drinks as the fix will be temporary and will cause you to crash. Instead, eat lots of stress busting food. Green leafy vegetables like spinach contain folate that produce dopamine, a pleasure inducing brain chemical that will help you feel calm. Protein foods like eggs and meat help produce serotonin that regulates hunger and feelings of happiness and well-being. Omega 3 foods such as salmon have anti-inflammatory properties that help counteract the negative effects of stress hormones.

Other foods such as blueberries, seeds, dark chocolate, avocado, nuts, yoghurt and oatmeal also help counter stress.

Many daily strategies also can help you keep stress at bay. Try relaxation activities, such as meditation, yoga, tai chi, breathing exercises and muscle relaxation. Programs are available online, in smartphone apps, and at many gyms and community centers.

Stay positive and practice gratitude, acknowledging the good parts of your day or life. Accept that you can't control everything. Find ways to let go of worry about situations you cannot change. Learn to say "no" to additional responsibilities when you are too busy or stressed.

Finally, stay connected with people who keep you calm, make you happy, provide emotional support and help you with practical things. A friend, family member or neighbour can become a good listener or share responsibilities so that stress doesn't become overwhelming.

Yes, college can be a scary and overwhelming time in a person's life, but it can also be one of the most rewarding. Stress that college students feel can often affect their academic achievements as well as their personal life. However, everything is manageable if you tackle it wisely.

12 According to the article, college stress is...

| 1. New time — new craft | 5. Ceramics with a history |
| 2. A variety of folk patterns | 6. The craft to reflect life |
| 4. Masters of folk crafts | 8. A creative cooperation |
- A. Handicrafts are among the most popular souvenirs a la russe that foreign tourists buy when travelling in Russia, as it is stated on Russia Beyond website. Zhostovo paintings, Matryoshka dolls, Vologda lace, Gzhel, and many other examples of folk art with long and distinguished histories are the perfect presents for friends and family. In every Russian village there were folk craftsmen and artists with their own original styles. However, only several particular styles became known all over the country and beyond.
- B. Khokhloma is “the calling card” of all Russian patterns, the most well-known and recognizable both in Russia and abroad. Historically, khokhloma was a painting on wood — mainly on dishes and kitchen items, as well as on wooden furniture. Russian wooden spoons painted with khokhloma are especially famous overseas. The pattern is always painted on a black background with bright red, green and gold colours. The main khokhloma motifs are berries and herbs, sometimes the pattern features birds, as well.
- C. Khokhloma painting on wooden objects is pretty famous and it has certainly put the city of Nizhny Novgorod on the map. The type of handicraft, as well as the pattern, traditionally bears the name of the place where it was first produced. In the case of khokhloma, it is the village of Khokhloma in Nizhny Novgorod Region. There is a legend that the handicraft comes from the Old Believer icon painters of the 17th century. It is even more surprising that khokhloma and matryoshka dolls have the same roots.
- D. Gzhel is the type of ceramic handicraft. It comes from the village of Gzhel in Moscow Region, where the special clay has been mined for ages. Porcelain produced from local clay was appreciated even at the court of Tsar Alexei Mikhailovich. In the 19th century, there were dozens of factories in the area, which produced dishes, stove tiles and other ceramic products, as well as toys in the form of animals. The technique of gzhel is ‘majolica’ and it features floral ornaments and all in the brand’s blue and white colours.
- E. The painting of forged tin trays in the village of Zhostovo in Moscow Region dates back to 1825. The craft was “imported” from the Urals by the Demidov family — in Tagil, there was already a successful production of painted trays. The local Zhostovo artists, who already painted miniatures on wooden items, were engaged in the production of these trays. This synthesis of arts and crafts resulted in Zhostovo trays. Masters depict both garden and field flowers. They put a drawing with oil paints in several layers, achieving the three-dimensional image.
- F. Palekh lacquer miniature is a relatively young folk craft. After the 1917 Revolution, it was taken up by talented artists, former icon painters and masters of temple paintings from the village of Palekh in Ivanovo Region. Artists focused their skills on “ancient painting”. They depicted scenes from folk tales and works of literature, using iconographic techniques. In the Palekh style, on a black background with bright red and gold colours, artists now paint mostly decorative items: often jewelry caskets or small souvenirs.

G. Originally from Gorodets, Nizhny Novgorod Region, this pattern dates back to the 19th century. It was first used to decorate sewing devices. Later, it was also found on wooden furniture and other items: chests, caskets, sledges, window shutters and even doors. Folk artists depicted genre scenes from the everyday life of merchants and peasants. Plots and characters could be very different, but often a matchmaking, a feast or a promenade. There were also images of horses, birds and some other domestic animals.

The dangers of microplastics

With recent research, it appears that retiring plastic from our lives should be an expedited process. About a month ago it was reported that microplastics had been found in human blood.

The finding was supported in a study co-authored by Professor Vethaak, who asked the question if the particles retained in the body or transported to certain organs. These are questions that scientific research has yet to answer, showing the dubious knowledge we have on the effect of such an invasive material on our bodies and our culture.

We have learned to shake hands with this devilish commodity, holding its hand while we carry groceries, and unknowingly consuming it in the food we eat. Even worse, infants are the most vulnerable to it. Babies often play and interact with plastic items from birth. From chewing on plastic teething rings to playing with plastic tub toys, children have a lot of exposure to plastic and its additives. According to a study released in September 2021, that exposure may be cause for concern.

We need to urge our local governments to support bills that limit our usage of single-use plastics that are very often dumped into our environments, whether that is holding businesses and manufacturers accountable through taxes or even making environmentally-friendly packaging more accessible.

One of these types of plastics that can be found in our blood is polyethylene, the kind used in carrying bags and food containers. This type of plastic has the highest propensity to be dangerous because plastic bags are an extremely common occurrence in our trash. Due to winds, and careless littering, they have also been a plague on the natural world.

Plastic can be found in our solid and liquid waste. It can damage human cells and be found in placentas, the essential organ that babies live off until birth. It can be deduced from this that there is a potential for cancer risks and for us to be born with these invasive plastics in us. Truly chilling.

We have an opportunity to ban these bags. The risk of future generations having embedded plastics in their diet and bodies should veto any argument for convenience.

It isn't just the potential for invasive plastics to ruin our health that's terrifying, but the fact that our hubris as a factory-fueled civilization has led to this point; that for those who take part in its norms, come with the risk of having an infamously irremovable man-made unnatural material within them.

Plastic is just as bad as lead, a material also commonly used for its time but if not, even worse. It was a material widely used in paint, car gas, and toys. With research, though, scientists figured out the psychological and physical tolls of lead, and now we use it far less openly. At least paint companies no longer advertise how great lead paint is to the youth.

As animals and agricultural goods get exposed to these plastics — even trace amounts of it — they permanently become a part of the ecosystem, ecosystems we feed ourselves from today. It can get in our salt, our water from leaching plastic bottles we drink, or from pollution which even filters cannot get rid of completely, and even at that, it is unfortunate a solution is in a paywall.

It is important we take measures into our own hands and support the banning of plastic bags within a mass-market scale, urging our lawmakers that short-term inconveniences are no excuse for long-term detriments the likes of which we haven't even researched enough to know, with one thing being certain, our manufactured material will prove malicious.

- A. As Joan Crawford once advised: “Care for your clothes like the good friends they are.” Something has definitely gone wrong if you find it easier to buy a new outfit in your lunch hour instead of going through a pile of clothes on your floor for something that isn’t creased or dirty, or both. So take more time to organise your clothes and try storing winter and summer clothes separately. It helps calm the shopping panic and feel excited every time those old friends reappear again and again.
- B. Even if you’re never going to start making dresses from scratch, you can make your wardrobe better with little more than a YouTube tutorial and a hotel sewing kit. Clothes are sometimes abandoned for the smallest of reasons, such as an uncomfortable neckline or a scratchy label. You shouldn’t be afraid of using the scissors. Learn a few basic skills and you can replace buttons and zips, patch up the worn-out leg of your best-loved jeans and restyle secondhand finds to fit you perfectly.
- C. If you are fussy about wearing a stranger’s hand-me-downs, deadstock is a sustainable compromise. Usually, these are clothes that were never sold because of small defects or oversupply. Searching “deadstock” on sites such as Etsy and eBay will return great items from across the decades that might have been destined for the bin or burning. Likewise, clothes which are available for sale at a reduced price is a common sight in charity shops. If you care about our planet, give those extra items a loving home.
- D. Fashion has its negative effects both on our planet and on people. Who made our clothes? Which materials were used? Fashion brands begin to understand that people care about those things and sometimes share false information to present an environmentally responsible public image. Luckily, there are apps which help us to shop consciously. They have rated more than 2,000 brands on their treatment of people, the planet and animals, providing an at-a-glance verdict from “great” to “avoid”.
- E. The cheapest way to reduce one’s role in fashion negative effect on the environment is to stop buying. And yet for many of us, the simple idea of doing so is enough to give us the shakes. I promised to buy nothing brand-new for a year, and documented the results in my book — but if a whole year is too difficult, start smaller. Challenge yourself to three months, or even just one. It takes time for your brain to break the cycle of positive emotions and feelings usually associated with buying a new fashionable outfit.
- F. Just like deleting your ex’s number and blocking their social networks profile, a fast-fashion breakup involves admin. So go through your inbox and unsubscribe from all shopping emails — even those from the golfing supplies outlet you bought your uncle’s Christmas present from in 2012. Then, filter your social media feeds. Unfollow all the influencers whose pastel-hued grids exist to persuade you to buy things, and replace them with slow fashion supporters, who are fighting to reduce piles of commercial waste.

- G. Patience is a virtue and timing is everything, especially when it comes to an impulse purchase — usually clothes that people buy suddenly and without planning beforehand. There are brands that only make what customers want. By doing so, they minimise waste and manage their labour more effectively. Made-to-order fashion is the cure to fast fashion's need for speed. Plus, it's a good way to test your own loyalty to a trend. If you can't wait a few weeks for that new outfit, maybe it wasn't such a must-have after all.

Educational technology

The covid outbreak showed all of us that education online is possible. Moreover, it can be even effective if we learn to implement educational technology available today.

Educational technology is the use of tools in the classroom to develop an engaging and personalized learning experience. Beyond the use of computers, students and teachers can use interactive platforms, devices, and even analytical software to better gauge students' progress using data in real-time. Learning has never been a one-size-fits-all endeavour, and with educational technology, teachers can better serve students' individualized needs.

The benefits of technology in education are far-reaching and growing with each day. Let's take a look at some of the upsides of how technology impacts education positively.

The first thing that comes to mind is 24/7 availability and accessibility. Technology like the internet and the ability to record lectures, upload learning resources to a platform, and host discussion forums make it possible to expand one's access and availability to learn. For example, at many universities around the world students can earn their degrees entirely online through the use of an online learning system. Students used to have to be physically located inside a classroom to obtain their education. These days, online learning (by choice or by circumstance) has led to a revolution in education that makes it accessible to anyone, anywhere.

Furthermore, technology offers great metrics for tracking progress. With technological platforms, students and teachers can report and review progress based on each individual's performance. Through the use of analytics, teachers can easily visualize how a student is growing or being thwarted. This can help teachers spot inefficiencies or areas that are ripe for improvement or attention.

Follow-up activities in online education are more diverse. Once a student leaves their designated class time, homework is a standard follow-up. However, when handing out paperwork, there may be missed opportunities. With education and technology, teachers can design personalized follow-up activities and grant each student the ability to learn at their own pace, even when they are outside of the classroom. For example, teachers can host a variety of options online for follow-up activities, and students, based on their level of understanding, can choose their course of action.

What the opponents of online education usually say is that you lack communication. But I think using technology actually means increased collaboration. Classroom management tools make it easier than ever for students, parents, and teachers to collaborate. For example, it's not always easy to get students to work together in groups. But, with online portals and discussion forums, students can contribute in their own space and time to work with other students. Additionally, teachers can communicate and collaborate in an organized manner with parents for feedback and the sharing of ideas, thoughts, and/or concerns.

Lastly, just because schools or institutions use educational technology, it doesn't mean that the need for a teacher is removed. Teachers are necessary to implement the technology properly, devise creative lesson plans, and support students' needs, among other things.

To conclude, technology in education has led to more accessibility, lower costs, and personalized learning experiences. From education data platforms to online schools and everything in between, it's easy to see how technology has affected education, and continues to do so with each innovation.

- A. As you know not everything goes as planned in business, and somewhere along the line, someone might interfere with your work. Competitors change their tactics, the government makes new laws and regulations, suppliers run into their own issues and even natural disasters play their role in stopping the march of progress. A truly great leader is able to quickly adapt to these new situations and find a way around them, rather than give up or keep on going with the plan anyway.
- B. Being able to communicate effectively with people from different countries in various contexts is an important skill for anyone who wants to succeed in business. But communication isn't always about saying the right thing. It also means that you are able to understand the feelings of your often multinational team, and keep the promises you make in those inspiring speeches. Letting your strengths shine through and showing confidence in the way you communicate is one of the most powerful tools a leader can use.
- C. Being responsible means being able to raise your hand and admit when you've done something wrong. It is never easy. When there is blame to be accepted for a business error, the leader must do it. But responsibility also means being able to reward and congratulate your employees. Spreading recognition and appreciation where appropriate can go a long way. When a business owner is able to accept blame and pass on congratulations to those who truly deserve it, a leader is born.
- D. Being a true leader can be tough. There's a balance between creating a successful strategy and supporting and making sure that others follow it. The politics and pressures associated with being in a leadership position can be wearing on a good day, and unbearable on a bad day. If you want to be an effective leader you should focus on the big picture and delegate smaller tasks to your team. Coping with difficult tasks helps a team to build confidence and enjoy working for you.
- E. Courage is a changing thing, but incredibly important in a great leader. A leader needs to be able to stand alone and stand up for what they believe in. Having the courage to do what you believe will work is sometimes one of the hardest things to do. However, courage is not the only thing that matters. With courage also comes determination and patience. Together they make it possible for leaders to keep going along a difficult road and keep their head held high, no matter what the outcome is.
- F. A good leader will often easily command the attention of an entire room, sometimes without even speaking. This level of presence is not something innate, something you just possess from birth. It's a quality that needs to be earned through the respect of your employees, working hard and being honest at every step of the journey. Acting distant or superior to employees is likely to cause dislike. Instead, a good leader can listen to their employees, talk on their level and gain their trust.

G. Leaders need to be able to influence other people through authentic and transparent communication. Apart from that leaders should continuously encourage others to live by the main company values and agree with business goals. And when it comes to real leaders, they exemplify the behaviours and characteristics that they encourage in their followers. They walk the walk and talk the talk. As a result, group members admire these leaders and work to emulate these behaviours.

Before Murmansk appeared on the map of Russia in the early 20th century, Arkhangelsk, B_____, played the role of the country’s main northern port since the 16th century. Since that date the city, E_____, leads its history. It was the last city founded in the Russian Empire. Six months later Romanov-on-Murman became known as Murmansk.

During its short history, the last city founded in the Russian Empire witnessed a lot of turbulent events. During the Civil War, Murmansk became one of the main centres of the White movement. Time management

Everyone has the same number of hours in the day. As a student, it never really seems like there's enough time to do the things you want to do, let alone the things you have to do, right? What are the best time management tips for students that can help with this?

My first tip is to set a schedule. As they used to say, "Pencil it in." Sure, we've come a long way from relying on agenda books, but schedulers and agendas (digital or print) can play a huge role in how we manage time daily. You can either be really serious about scheduling by breaking your time into 15–30-minute blocks and outlining what you'll be doing, or a little more lenient by roughly planning your days in advance. But make sure you put in time for family, jobs, and, most importantly, leisure. If you are under pressure, ask for help from your friends and family with your other chores. You may be surprised just how happy they are to help so you can succeed.

It is important to set realistic goals. Our society tells us to aim high and "shoot for the stars, so if you fall, you land on the clouds." But sometimes, it makes more sense to set realistic and smaller goals so that you can pass those hurdles and gain momentum to accomplish bigger goals. In my opinion, slow progress is better than no progress, and by being able to complete the small steps, you're making collective moves to accomplish your long-term goals.

This method also works to manage time because you can't see so far into the future. By setting up your goals day in and day out, you're creating good habits that are within your control that accumulate over time to cause big changes. For example, if you want to run a marathon, you're going to start training daily with just a few miles and build up from there. In that same manner, you can train your brain and mind to grow stamina for studying. If you want to learn a new language, you can do daily lessons, and over time, you'll realise how much you've learnt as all the short lessons accumulate.

It may sound too simple, but it really works — wake up early. Begin by going to bed at the usual time, then wake up at 5:30 a.m. You may struggle the first morning, but make sure you get up. Go to sleep early that night, and again wake up at 5:30 a.m. the next day. After that your body clock will reset, and your new wake up time will be easy. By setting that alarm clock for the early hours of the morning, you're setting up your day to maximize your time.

When you're up early, you rush less, and in turn, stress less. Since the body and mind are getting up from a fresh night's sleep, it's the best time to get all your complex thinking tasks out of the way so that you can be productive and set the tone for your day. Waking up early has a lot of other benefits, too. For one, you're up before most other people, so it automatically helps to eliminate distractions. It also gives you the time to exercise and get some "me time," before all your other commitments take centre stage.

Distractions are everywhere, especially the digital kinds. There are many apps that can help lock you out of the internet if you can't help but check your apps while trying to work or study. And if you are not ready to install another app or software, try leaving your phone in a different room and create a specific location from where you will just work. And, this isn't just a good idea to try when you're busy working. It's also a nice exercise when you're with friends and family because you can truly be present with them.

Time management is important, especially when you're a student trying to fit loads of things into your busy life. Even learning some basic tips can do wonders. Every minute is precious, don't waste it doing something that isn't adding any value to your life.

| 1. Helpful indeed | 5. Testing IQ |
| 2. Most loving ones | 6. A true friend |
| 3. Outdoing humans | 7. Distant relatives |
| 4. Little but not the least | 8. Becoming dangerous |
- A. The strongest sense for dogs is smell. In comparison to humans, dogs have almost 25% more scent receptors. As a result, dogs have an excellent sense of smell. Just as many humans rely on their sense of sight to navigate, dogs rely on their sense of smell to understand and explore their surroundings. Dogs can smell scents about 100,000 times more acutely than humans, which is surprising indeed. Because of their acute and accurate sense of smell, some breeds of dog are unique indeed.
- B. The word “dog” refers to a species of animals within the canine family. Dogs typically live within households and are owned by people as pets or as working dogs, which makes them domestic for the most part. There are some very friendly dogs that are great for families with children of all ages. Since dogs can pick up scents that humans cannot detect, they are also valuable additions to law enforcement teams, where they perform activities like smelling for drugs and weapons.
- C. While most dogs, by today’s standards, would be considered to be of the domestic variety, there are many different species of canines that live in the wild and are feral. Some examples of feral dogs are coyotes, wolves, jackals and dingoes. These feral species can be found throughout the world in some parts of North America, Africa, Asia and Europe. In some cases, these dogs are dangerous to humans. Canines like wolves and coyotes are often a nuisance to farmers and livestock.
- D. Although pit bulls, German shepherds and rottweilers are often considered the most aggressive breeds of dog, any dog of any breed can be aggressive. Research shows that training and socialization are more important than breed in predicting aggression. According to the Smithsonian Institution, most researchers report that any puppy can grow into an aggressive dog in future. Dominance-based training methods are very often linked to increased aggressive behaviours.
- E. While any dog breed or mix can be affectionate, some breeds, such as retrievers, have a reputation for being extra friendly. Other dogs like huskies require a little more interaction and attention in order to earn their affection, which gives them a less-affectionate reputation. All dogs require attention and the proper training and care. German shepherds, for example, are so caring and affectionate of their owners that they experience separation anxiety when left alone for too long.
- F. Those who prefer small dogs often choose breeds, such as Spitz, Maltese and toy poodle, which all typically weigh less than 5 pounds. Many of these breeds are referred to as “toy” versions of a particular breed. Breeders selectively breed small or toy-sized dogs to create even smaller dogs that they classify as teacup size. The Yorkshire dogs, commonly known as Yorkies, were bred to be rat hunters. Even with their small stature, Yorkies may try to pick fights with larger dogs.

- G. The most common criterion for measuring intelligence in dogs is how easy the dog is to train. Researchers look at how quickly the dog can figure out what the trainer is asking for, how likely the dog is to repeat the action, how many commands the dog can learn and how long it can retain a learned command without reinforcement. However, these results can be skewed by the different ways some breeds interact with people. The most intelligent breeds of dog are working breeds.

Online learning

I graduated with academic honours without ever meeting my professors, embarking on an all-nighter with classmates and, technically, never having gone to a class at all. I was an online-only student, and as online degree programmes grow in popularity, my past three years of study were a crash-course in the unique challenges of learning online, as well as a glimpse into what the future of higher education might look like.

My school day looked very different than most: rather than loading up my backpack and heading to class, I would wake up, eat breakfast while doing my first round of schoolwork for the day, and spend a few hours finishing assignments. Then, I'd head off to work, maybe tucking in a study session during lunch before wrapping up homework or preparing for exams in the evening. Saturday and Sunday became two of my busiest school days and I became an expert at working everywhere from my desk to the car.

Some of my most vivid undergraduate memories were of completing a term paper on the floor backstage at the ballet performance I was managing, and stumbling home after a full day of work to begin school that evening. Just like traditional universities, I had papers, exams, and grades — only, there were no office hours and no such thing as sick days.

Enrolment in online learning programmes has grown over the past few years, with more than a quarter of students enrolled in at least one online course. But too many misconceptions still persist around the experience of being an online-only student — for example, that an online degree doesn't carry the same level of prestige as a traditional one. By contrast, online learning enabled me to hone skills such as self-motivation and time management that ultimately made me a better student, and later, a more prepared young adult.

There are differences between traditional university time management, and the commitment required to study online. You attend an in-person class for a select period of time in which you are entirely focused on that subject. In an online programme, you must be able to self-motivate and manage multiple courses in the limited time that you are able to provide for yourself. Although online study may eliminate the social aspect of in-person education, it can counter that loss through the ability to increase personal productivity.

With no set class hours, an online student defines their own schedule, a significant reason why so many working students are drawn to online degree programmes. Given that about 70% of students work while attending school and that students in the USA and the UK want more flexibility than ever from their education, gone are the days of a "typical" university experience.

In terms of academic tradition, it is important to point out that distance learning is hardly new, although developments in technology are recent. The concept of higher learning through "correspondence courses" is more than 170 years old, and with the addition of modern technology and desire for increased flexibility, is an inarguable part of the future of universities.

I may not have spent afternoons sprawled out on the campus quad, but my online experience added more things to my education than it subtracted. As the world changes rapidly and the workforce evolves with it, options like online learning create fabulous opportunities for students to take charge of what their learning and life will look like. What more can we ask from education, really?

| 1. A dream place | 5. A useful tool |
| 2. Signs to consider | 6. Come and win |
| 3. A popular hobby | 7. Virtual fishing |
| 4. The time allowed | 8. Fishing forecast |
- A. The best times of day to fish are one hour before and after high tide, and one hour before and after low tide. Just after sunrise and just before sunset are also great times to fish because this is when fish feed. When the temperature begins to rise is another good fishing time. The flow of water also has an effect on successful fishing. It is better to fish when the water is still or rippled than on a very windy day. Likewise, a full moon is an indication that the fishing should be good.
- B. There are many resorts to which people travel primarily for the fishing opportunities offered. Such a resort usually caters for other outdoor activities, for example, hunting, hiking or rafting, as well. Fishing seasons vary according to region and types of fish typical to the water bodies within it. It is common for a resort that caters for outdoor sportsmen to offer prime fishing excursions in season, though depending on the typical climate of the region excursions may be offered all year round.
- C. A fishing barometer is a device that measures atmospheric pressure. It operates like any other barometer, with the added benefit of displaying whether or not conditions are ideal for fishing. Use of a fishing barometer is based on the theory that barometric pressure affects fish feeding activity. It is also believed that high pressure results in fish moving to shallower water, while low pressure leads fish to deeper water. A good fisherman can take advantage of these behaviours.
- D. The dates of fishing season depend entirely on the location. Each region has specific rules about fishing requirements. Local fish and wildlife authorities can be consulted to determine the exact dates, as well as other specific fishing regulations. As an example, Yellowstone National Park declares fishing season to be officially open between Memorial Day and the first Sunday of November. During this time period, those with proper licenses can fish the waters of the national park.
- E. Accurate calendars, tables and charts reporting the best times and dates for fishing and other activities that are dependent on the movement patterns and locations of animals are offered by BassMaster.com and PrimeTimes2.com. Most calendars that claim to report the best times to go fishing at various locations are based on Solunar theory. Solunar theory was developed in 1926 by J. A. Knight to predict the movements of animals based on some factors including the location of the moon.
- F. Fishing tournaments are organized regularly in many regions throughout the country. A boat, if needed, is typically provided for each contestant. To compete efficiently and get a prize in a fishing tournament, fishermen are usually advised to bring from three to five fishing rods, depending on how they plan to fish. Fishermen are also advised to dress in layers and wear polarized sunglasses. Entry costs for fishing tournaments vary depending on the tournament and the entry category.

G. People can find many fishing games online; two such games are Bass Fishing Pro and Bass Fishing Challenge. They are both fun games but differ slightly in nature. Bass Fishing Pro rewards a player for the total amount of fish caught in a set time period. Advancement in the game only occurs if all of the fish are caught within a certain level. Bass Fishing Challenge is a slightly more sophisticated game. The ultimate focus of this game is to advance through achieving a high score.

Summer jobs

As a high schooler, you may feel as though you lack the necessary experience to land a prime gig. However, there are plenty of jobs you are qualified for that pay rather well. Both part-time and full-time jobs are available for people of all abilities.

While it may be difficult to know exactly what career you want to pursue when you graduate from high school, summer jobs can offer the perfect opportunity to test a job you think you may like. If you do a great job and are still interested in the line of work once summer is over, you will have some much-needed experience. This can lead to more work next summer, and perhaps a part-time job while you attend school. The pay may not be great (internships are often unpaid) but the experience can be priceless. To find an internship you would like, you could ask a counselor at school for assistance, call up businesses you find interesting and ask whether they are hiring interns, and check out websites, which focus solely on interning.

If you want to earn some money, babysitter's job is a great choice. Friends of mine with two young children pay their babysitter $15 per hour — that's not a bad pay-rate for a part-time summer job. Ask any parent, and you will find that good babysitters are hard to come by. Do a great job taking care of the kids, and you could find yourself gainfully employed, earning great income and setting your own hours all summer long. Get your certification to further boost your credentials as a prospective nanny. While networking in your neighborhood will probably provide you with plenty of leads, you can also check out some websites to find more.

If you enjoy being outdoors, going camping and hiking, and playing sports, then working as a camp counselor is the perfect job for you — that is, if you don't mind watching over groups of kids away from their parents for weeks at a time! There are summer camps all over the country designated for almost any activity you could imagine, so you can likely find a perfect match for your interests. Camp counselor salaries vary greatly, especially for employees only working during summer months. However, year-round counselors earn an annual average salary around $23,000, so you could be making some serious money in the few short months of summer.

Summer is usually spent on vacation, but many students use their summer break to continue or enhance their education. If you are strong in any particular subjects, you could put up notices on bulletin boards around town to offer your services as a tutor. Tutors just starting out can charge around $15 per hour, while those holding advanced degrees and years of experience can charge up to $50 per hour. Along with making good money, you will gain great experience to add to your college applications, and you can set your own hours, leaving you plenty of time to hang out with friends.

Summer is a vacation season, so many people hit the road to their favorite destination during those months. But what about their pets? That's where you come in, taking care of the animals that have to stay home while the family goes on vacation. Pet-sitting is a very important job, and you would be entrusted to watch over the animals as if they were your own. Experience with dogs, cats, and other domestic animals is vital, along with any references you can get from family and friends.

So why not get some experience and earn money while you have a summer vacation? Who knows, maybe one of your summers will define your future career.

- A. Growing flowers is the activity and craft of growing plants, with a goal of creating a wonderful and amazing world around. Growing flowers is an admiration for many people, a dream for so many and a full-time job for some others who grow flower gardens for commercial purposes. The process of growing flowers requires a lot of patience, love and care, but the amazing result is worth trying. Growing a flower garden in particular is an exciting adventure indeed.
 - B. Many flowers have descriptive names or derive their names from ancient legends. For example, when squeezed, the blossom of the snapdragon looks like a dragon opening its jaws. The narcissus is named for the Greek myth of Narcissus and Echo. NamesofFlowers.net features alphabetized lists of flower names. The website also provides subgroups of flowers such as tropical, spring, summer and wedding flowers, and also alphabetized lists of flowers by colour categories.
 - C. The purpose of a flower is to attract pollinators to a plant so that the plant creates seeds. Bright colours, strong scents and sweet nectar all work together to attract birds, bees, ants, flies and other insects to move pollen from one flower to another. In some parts of the world small mammals and lizards also function as pollinators. The particular colour, pattern or scent of a flower attracts the appropriate pollinators. Some flowers produce pollen that is carried by the wind to other flowers.
 - D. Flowers are a great gift idea for loved ones, and it has never been easier to buy flowers for friends and family, near and far, thanks to a large number of online delivery services. Whether a person is wishing someone a happy birthday, sending sympathy or celebrating a big life moment like the birth of a baby or a wedding engagement, there are plenty of floral arrangement options to choose from online. Most online floral companies organize their arrangements by category.
 - E. Most flowers bloom in spring or summer. The specific timing of each bloom depends on the weather pattern in each area. Local florists or gardens are good sources of information on the blooming patterns of certain flowers in any particular climate. A number of online guides to flowers and plant life in different cities and parks are available to those interested in observing the local trends. Generally, spring-blooming flowers are a welcome sight as they mark the arrival of warm weather.
 - F. Some good flowering indoor plants include orchids, desert cacti and peace lilies. Orchids are the most popular blooming houseplant. There are thousands of varieties and hybrids of orchids, including those in every colour of the rainbow. Orchids need a moderate amount of watering and re-bloom, making it a long-lasting plant. Peace lilies are another option with folded white flowers and glossy green leaves. It is a tropical plant that does well with some warmth and humidity indoors.

- G. Not only are flowers beautiful additions to our homes, weddings and special events, they also have different meanings attached to them. Flower language is the art of flower symbolism. Floriography is another name for the language of flowers. Within the art of floriography, every flower carries its own special meaning, according to its variety and colour. Some flowers even take on a new meaning dependent on the number gifted, for example, a single red rose denotes "love at first sight".

Cycling to work

In larger cities, walking and transit get a much larger share of total commutes, but biking is still the laggard. Car commuting remains the overwhelming favorite, making up more than three-quarters of all trips even in major metro areas with long commute times.

As an enthusiastic cyclist and proponent of eco- (and wallet-) friendly transit alternatives, I find these numbers disappointing. However, I'm also a realist. Due to low population density and dispersed employment in the exurban belts around major cities, commuting by bike just isn't a viable option for millions of workers. The good news is that it is also possible for quite a lot.

For many who make the switch to bike commuting, health is a big reason why. Even if you ride at a leisurely pace, you get more exercise than you would by sitting behind the wheel of your car. An 80-kg person riding at about 24 km per hour — a brisk but not aggressive pace — burns more than 400 calories in a 30-minute ride. For someone of the same weight, a more leisurely 18-km per hour pace burns 245 calories in 30 minutes. By contrast, according to a Harvard study, an 84-kg person burns about 45 calories during 30 minutes of driving.

Office work is even less energy-intensive. Per the same Harvard study, sitting at your desk or in a meeting burns roughly 70 calories per hour. If you weigh more, the caloric benefits are actually greater, as heavier people tend to burn calories faster.

You may have heard that "sitting is the new smoking." There's still debate about just how unhealthy it is to sit for long periods, but few experts argue that it's good for you. Studies have linked prolonged sitting — as in a typical day at the office — to increased risk for certain cancers, blood clots, obesity, cardiovascular disease, and other conditions. If you're an office drone, starting and ending your workday on a bike and not in a car can cut out a significant amount of daily sitting time.

It's important to note that biking to and from work isn't a cure-all. Studies suggest that exercise alone may not completely counteract the negative health effects of sitting. If you're really worried about what all that time in an office chair is doing to you, you should stand up periodically (five minutes of standing per half-hour of sitting may help) or invest in a standing desk.

If you plan to regularly commute by bike, certain equipment and clothing can help make your experience easier and more tolerable. Depending on your current biking habits, you may already have some of this stuff. In many cases, the bike itself is the largest part of this investment. Even if helmets aren't required by law in your area, wearing one is still important for your safety. Location is everything. If you live somewhere with a wet, four-season climate, you need more equipment and clothing compared to riders in drier, milder places.

Biking isn't just for kids anymore. For growing numbers of workers, it's a viable alternative to driving to work or taking public transit. Of course, it's not right for everyone. If you live in a far-flung exurb or rural area, you probably have no choice but to drive unless you have the ability to work from home. But in more densely populated areas, commuting by bike may be easier and less costly than you imagined. With a few tweaks to your schedule, you could soon trade the nerve-grating cacophony of car horns and engines with the exhilarating rush of the wind in your hair.

- A. Miniature Moscow is a very detailed depiction of the USSR's capital. 300 workers created it in 1977 for the 60th anniversary of the Bolshevik Revolution. A complicated lighting system makes the 122-meter model very realistic. There are lighting variations between daylight and nighttime. Every window shines with different lights. Even the windows of the boat on the river are brightened. The model is on display in the elegant Radisson Collection Hotel and is still enjoyed by curious tourists who want a peek of the Soviet Moscow.
- B. Dozens of trees adorned with hundreds if not thousands of padlocks decorate the banks of the Moscow River. Some padlocks are often made in the shape of a heart, and each tree symbolises a couple's eternal love in marriage. When two people get married, they write their names on a padlock, lock it to some free space on one of the metal trees, and toss the key into the river. Although the practice is common in many other countries, the iron trees with lovers' locks make Moscow's bridge of love a unique and romantic site.
- C. The earliest mystery of Golosov Ravine in Kolomenskoye Park dates back to 1621 when part of a Tatar cavalry turned up at the walls of the Tsar's palace. They claimed to be part of the army that had attacked Moscow in 1571. Sensing defeat they fled into Golosov Ravine where they got lost in a thick green mist. They spent what seemed like only a few minutes finding their way through the fog, but emerged 50 years later. They carried outdated equipment, and an inquiry formed by the Tsar found that the men "probably told the truth."
- D. A lot of arcades have their special tokens for their games. But few have Soviet-era 15-kopek coins complete with a hammer and sickle. A few Russian students in the basement of a technical school preserve the Museum of Soviet Arcade Games. There are about 60 machines from the Soviet era, including video games, pinball machines, and a type of ice hockey. Although only 50 to 55 of the games are playable, each of the machines paints a picture of life and entertainment behind the Iron Curtain.
- E. Although there isn't currently a Disneyland in Russia, the next closest thing lies on the far outskirts of Moscow. This giant, six-story medieval palace coloured in shades of orange, green, and pink appears to be one of Moscow's most magical amusement parks. In reality, the towering chateau is a lavish kindergarten for 150 children. Pavel Grudinin, the architect of the building, wanted to share magic and fun with the kids of the area so they were always inspired and never bored.
- F. The elegant clock dates to 1777 when a noted automaton builder James Cox created it. It arrived in Russia in 1797 and was for a time owned by Prince Grigory Potemkin. Since the 18th century visitors have enjoyed the singing of three birds — an owl, a peacock, and a rooster. A squirrel, a fox, and other creatures can also be seen among the metal foliage. The actual dial of the clock is hidden in a mushroom. The clock is now the only large example of 18th-century robotics to have survived unchanged into the 21st century.

G. On a bright and colourful archway in the courtyard of a contemporary art complex hangs a simple sign denoting "John Lennon Street", with a big blue arrow pointing up. A devoted Beatles fan started this unique little spot. He had wanted to turn one of Saint Petersburg's real streets into a monument to the beloved band, but city authorities refused this idea. So, he designed a street sign and added an arrow pointing up. But now the street does not go along the ground and thus does not fall under the jurisdiction of officials.

Leadership in college

Everyone says it's important to get involved in college. Joining organizations and clubs helps college students feel more connected to their schools, build résumés, learn important life skills that may not be gleaned in lecture halls, and potentially meet some of their best friends.

The minute I walked on campus to begin my freshman year, I knew I had to get involved in as many organizations as I could. In January, I began my position as a sisterhood director, which entailed planning events for my chapter, whether that is at our own chapter or out in the city community. I've hosted events such as essential-oil DIY parties, yoga classes, movie nights and senior send-off celebrations for our chapter members. I was very excited about the opportunity, and I knew that my previous leadership experiences would help me out. However, my perspective on what it means to be a leader among my peers has definitely changed after a semester of holding the position.

There are three main components that I have learned through leadership: communication, organization, and delegation. I've learned that no matter how many times or in how many different ways you communicate a message, it will not get across to everyone, and that is OK.

People value transparency and sometimes need to be told exactly what you expect of them. Some people are so on top of schedules that they could tell you what's going on six months from now, but some people need constant reminders and do not keep track of their schedules. There is a gap in communication between these two types of people that can lead to frustration and disorganization on both ends.

This past semester I have worked to bridge that gap between types of communicators, and that is one of the most valuable things I have learned from my position.

It's important to appreciate the time it takes for every aspect of an event to plan and to take place; some tasks can take months to put together, and those should not involve procrastination. But some are OK to sort out the day of. Some of my best work was done with hours to spare, and if that's when you work best, why avoid it? Procrastination, when paired with an organized plan, can turn out to be successful.

One of the strongest qualities a good leader can have is the ability to delegate. It's a misconception that as a leader, you must do and be a part of every step of a project. Delegating tasks to members of a committee, in my case, was a lifesaver and what made my job so worthwhile. I got to work with so many different talents, and this way, they all feel as if they're contributing in a way that is specific to their talents.

What I've learned through mistakes and successes in my position has led me to be more knowledgeable, not only about planning events and about the members of my chapter but about communicating, organizing, modeling roles, and involving the community.

I feel so grateful to be in a position that has encouraged me to learn more about myself and the skills that I've had to acquire. I feel so fortunate to have had this position so far, and it has made me reflect on the kind of leader I hope to be in my future career. Having a leadership position in college is vital to be able to discover how you communicate with others and what skills you have and lack before you go off into the real world.

Hitchhiking in Iceland

The wind was rushing in off the ocean and the purple flowers swayed. Small white clouds floated across the bright blue sky, which made the day seem warmer than it was. I shivered, breathing in the clean air and the scent of the ocean as I wandered the path over to the lighthouse. My phone rang. "Hello?" "Hi, sweetie, I was just calling to see how you were doing?" my mom [30] _____, pretending not to be worried. "Where are you?" I hesitated. "Um, just on the side of the [31] _____." She laughed nervously. "I hope you're not hitchhiking!"

Over five days I rode in twelve different vehicles, with twenty different people to thank for not leaving me on the side of the road in the cold and wet. The longest I had to wait for a ride was maybe an hour and a half, and even then I had the company of a hitchhiker trying to [33] _____ a ride in the opposite direction. People picked me [34] _____ and gave me snapshots of their lives, why they were there, what they had loved most.

When I finally 35 _____ at Reykjavik, I called my mom again to let her know that I had made it safely. "I'm so glad," she said, so clearly 36 _____. "I never want you to do that again." My mother had hoped I wouldn't hitchhike, but I never wished I hadn't. Iceland is beautiful, with its lava fields and hot springs, but there is more to it than that. There are the kindness and openness of the local people and those who wander there.

- A. I was very excited about my first teaching job. I didn't plan it but I was given an opportunity to teach at an exclusive university. I was greatly challenged by my students then. They were great English speakers way ahead of me as I was not so confident, articulate, and fluent. But whew, I survived! In fact, it was a great learning experience for me. I had to do a lot of practice like talking to myself in front of the mirror or taking notes of the jokes. It was funny but it helped a lot to improve my language skills.
- B. Although I could have chosen different specializations when I got my first degree in Engineering, I decided to get my Master's in Marketing. I did not know if I was prepared for that. I was only 21 when I started it up but my teachers believed that I had some natural skills. Even though I had some doubts at the beginning, choosing to do a Master's degree in this field was one of the most important decisions in my life. It shaped me the way I am now: a gleaming professor trying to contribute to the development of society.
- C. I remember my first day at school; it was my mother who took me there. I had to wear a school uniform: a white polo shirt, black trousers, and black leather shoes. I had a small backpack with an exercise book, a pencil box, a bottle of water, and my lunch box inside. I was happy and very excited to see other students. That day I met my future friends and teachers. Throughout the years I learnt many subjects like English, Maths, Science, Religion, PE, Art, and Social Studies. Now my first week is over, but I still remember it.
- D. 33 hours a week. A dollar an hour. My first teaching job at an upcoming college in my home province showed me the realities of work life. I was a fresh graduate from university and I wanted to get a job soon enough. I accepted the offer because I felt it was somewhat prestigious to teach at a college. But it was exhausting to teach 11 classes in one week with an average of 25 students per class. The 2-hour daily commute to work and back added to the exhaustion. It wasn't as prestigious a job as I imagined.
- E. Throughout the years I had many jobs but the first one was unforgettable. I loved what I did. I loved teaching English and Public Speaking classes. It was wonderful to meet new colleagues who soon became friends. The fellowship among teachers was genuine and warm. The best part for me was being in the classroom teaching real students. It was fulfilling to see them learn and grow. It's been more than 20 years since I first entered the classroom, and I'm still teaching. I guess I'll stay in the vocation for a little bit more.
- F. I think it's a good idea for parents to come and stay for a night in a hotel nearby for your first day of uni. I, unfortunately, was on my own on move-in day and it was a massive hassle! It was difficult trying to carry all the stuff on my own and I ended up having to ask a stranger outside my accommodation if they could help me carry my shopping up to my room, which was super embarrassing. It's also nice to have someone there for you, all of my flatmates' parents helped them move in so it was a bit lonely for me the first couple of days while they were with their family.

- G. My first day at university was very nerve-wracking, as I completely forgot what I actually meant to do when I finally got there. It was embarrassing at first when my mom roamed around the room making my bed and asking where to put my teddies. But once she left I propped the door open with a chair and made friends with each and every flatmate popping in and saying hi. I got my university ID card and went out with my friends. I tried to make the most of every second as they flew by. The next thing I knew, I was graduating!

Preschool education

The overwhelming need for preschool teachers in America is a result of a preschool teacher's pay which is comparatively low. In the country nearly 15 million children are living in poverty, whose mothers and fathers are wrestling with low wages and low socio-economic status. They are trying to make a way for their children to have the opportunity to succeed in the school system, and a large role in the success of a child's future is the promise of preschool.

But with preschool teachers still deemed as nothing more than babysitters, the undervaluing of proper education is profound. About half of the children under the age of five are living below the poverty line and need preschool to pull them from the cycle of poverty and prepare them for a life of possibility.

From birth to the age of five, people's brains develop more than they will at any other time in their lives. And the way the minds are molded during these first five years affects the way children will navigate their further education, and then their lives. The countless experiences encountered by children during these first five years of life — regardless of whether they are positive or negative experiences — shape developing brains. And by the time a child enters kindergarten, 90 % of their brains have developed.

Preschool teachers are the hands shaping millions of minds during the most influential and delicate period of a person's life. And therefore, preschool teachers are much more than babysitters and deserve to be treated as such by society and paid decent salaries.

In those first five years of life, our brains develop so intricately and intensely. According to First Things First, what allows the brain to develop, think, communicate, and grow is the connections our brain cells make during those first few years. These connections are cultivated over the course of those years, and every experience is documented by our developing brains. So when children are entering into preschool, they are being profoundly shaped into the kind of person they will be for the rest of their life, because of the messages and connections in their brains.

The fragility of children's lives is astounding, and preschool teachers instill patience in their lessons as they introduce children to reading, writing, storytelling, social studies, creative arts, vocabulary expansion, math, and science for the first time. All the while, they allow children room to grow, ask questions, and discover.

Children without preschool enter the education system heavily unprepared and devastatingly disadvantaged, lacking in areas such as social and cognitive development. Children without preschool are less likely to graduate — or if they do graduate, they are less likely to pursue college, according to a 2015 study from the U.S. Department of Education. But children with preschool are less likely to repeat a grade and are more likely to succeed in whatever career they choose.

Preschool teachers give children a platform for a successfully patterned life and deserve pay reflecting such. Because when they are paid so little — when they are surviving on the brink of the poverty line — it is overwhelmingly difficult to continue pursuing a career as preschool teachers. America needs preschool. And preschool teachers need adequate and fair pay.

- A. Magpies do not have the best of reputations. They are well known for their thievery, enthusiastically collecting shiny objects to decorate their nests. In the past, when people kept magpies as pets there were plenty of opportunities for birds to pick up objects of value. However, even though the birds do pick up all sorts of things to explore them there is absolutely no evidence that people have ever found anything silver or of value in a magpie's nest. Magpies are not thieves, they are merely inquisitive.
- B. When a cat purrs, you might think it is as simple as a human smiling or a dog wagging its tail joyfully, but it's more complicated than that. Cats don't just purr when they're happy but also when they're distressed or afraid. Evidence shows that purring is not only a method of communication but a defence mechanism and a way to keep calm in stressful or painful situations. The low frequency of a cat's purr causes a series of vibrations inside their body that can ease breathing, heal injuries and build muscle while acting as a form of pain relief.
- C. Have you ever noticed that the more times you read the text the less you remember it? A survey stated that the most commonly used strategy of school and university students is repeated reading. That means that they simply read through books or notes over and over again. This passive and shallow strategy produces minimal or no studying. Mostly it happens because when we read the material again and again, it becomes familiar and easy for our minds to process. However, it doesn't mean that we have mastered it.
- D. Understanding how dogs and puppies learn will give you the power to control your best friend. In wild animals energy is precious. When food runs out, energy rapidly follows. Everything the animal does has an energy cost, so animals have evolved to do what paybacks them. In other words, when things 'get better' for your dog, it will try that behaviour again. Next time you train your dog, deliberately reward it for something that you like, because a well-behaved dog is actually a happy dog.
- E. From Egyptian harps to Roman trumpets, from Mesopotamian songs to Greek hymns, not to mention a wealth of vases, frescoes, statues, and tablets, testifying to the importance of music in ancient societies. Songs and melodies were a constant presence in public life. They accompanied religious rites to attract the attention of the gods, they were performed at important events related to social-political power, and even played on the battlefield, sounding the signal to attack, and in parades to celebrate a victory.
- F. Baby girls wear pink. Baby boys wear blue. Little girls join the dance. Little boys play hockey. Young ladies study teaching. Young men study math. Nice women marry nice men, raise nice little boys and girls, and the cycle of stereotypical life continues unless you make a conscious effort to let yourself be who you are. Stereotypes create a misconception of who people are and how they live in other cultures, religions, or countries. They are bad even when they're good. And this is a big problem in our multicultural society.

G. It is easy to believe that we have mapped the entire world and that the idea of uncharted waters, mysterious islands untouched and creatures unseen by humankind seems fantastic. Surely we've found everything there is to find? Not necessarily. Back in 2012, an ecologist and conservation scientist discovered a new ecosystem on satellite imagery. He used satellite maps to navigate to a place and drones to hike the mountain, which up until then had only been a bird's-eye view image on a satellite.

Going solar

Is solar a smart long-term investment that can reduce your carbon footprint? Absolutely — and everybody from the Department of Energy to Leonardo DiCaprio can back it up. But even something as trendy as solar can have downsides. Let's break down the top perks and quirks of going solar.

The top benefit of solar panels is pretty clear. When you install solar power for your home, you generate your own electricity, become less reliant on your electric utility and reduce your monthly electric bill. A solar panel system typically has a 25–30-year lifespan, which means that you can cut your electricity costs for decades to come by going solar. Also the cost of solar is dropping across the nation.

The next point is that it improves the value of your home. The recent studies found that property values increase after solar is installed. Moreover, it can pay you money while you are earning back your investment. Due to a number of awesome solar incentives in the U.S., solar panels can actually turn you a profit in addition to generating bill savings that pay off the cost of the system.

Then, you have to consider the volatile nature of electricity prices and determine what utility rates will be in years to come. When you compare the cost of utility electricity with home solar, you should keep in mind that you can expect electricity rates to increase annually. Over the past years, national electricity costs have increased at a rate of 2.2 % per year. So this is an added incentive for solar: when you generate your own energy with a rooftop system, you're taking control of energy costs so that you are no longer a victim to variable utility rates.

It reduces carbon emissions and helps move towards energy independence. As the world searches for the most cost-effective ways to reduce our carbon output in the face of global climate change, solar energy has become a trendy resource for a good reason and perhaps a small victory giving us the right to celebrate Earth Day.

But you should keep in mind that it doesn't work for every type of roof. Certain roofing materials used in older or historical homes can be difficult for solar installers to work with. In addition, many homes and apartment buildings have skylights or other rooftop additions like roof decks that can make the solar installation process difficult or costly. In the long run, however, this shouldn't be a barrier. If your home does not qualify for a rooftop solar system, you still have options: ground mounted solar panels or buying a share in a community solar garden can get you around this drawback of solar energy. Well, not many drawbacks, yeah?

After reviewing our pros and cons of solar energy, there are some clear takeaways. Rooftop solar panels aren't the perfect fit for everyone, but that's okay. Like any other home efficiency product, solar panels provide clear benefits to property owners that are in need of energy upgrades and electricity bill reduction. Not everyone fits that description. Solar energy should be thought of as an investment: a low-risk investment with major returns, but a hefty investment nonetheless.

We are moving towards clean energy, and solar is our cheapest option. There is nothing unclear about our energy future if we want to get rid of fossil fuels and move to renewables. Solar is the most scalable, consumer-friendly solution.

12 Who supports solar energy?

- A. We often forget that there is a person on the other side of the email. Just as we wouldn't walk into a friend's house for dinner and bark out a command, we shouldn't forget to say something nice at the beginning and the end of the message. Often those little niceties can go a long way. Social cues aren't dated constructs; they're valuable warm-up phrases in communication. Start by saying "Hi", comment on someone's latest achievements, and wish the other person well.
- B. Enjoying a meal with friends and family is not only about the food, but it's also about creating a warm and inviting atmosphere. And hunger for the meal ahead adds to its enjoyment. Red is an exciting, energizing and warm colour. It is associated with love, roses, danger and passion. Having a shade of red in a dining room can add a sense of drama. Marketers believe that the colour red is welcoming, vibrant and warm, and makes people hungry: think of popular fast-food logos.
- C. Many emails and essays are written exclusively in the first person. Shift the focus to the recipient and consider what they want, need, or would like to hear. After writing an email, scan it quickly for how many times you use the word "I". See if you can edit some of them out. So, "I'm teaching a new writer's workshop this spring, and I want help sharing the program. I think you'd be interested in it" can be turned into something like: "New writing workshop for creatives has just been launched. Let me know if this is what you were looking for".
- D. Just because you've written an email now doesn't mean it needs to be sent at this exact moment. Delaying the sending is one of the most powerful and underutilized tools of emailing. Scheduling emails to be sent in 24 or 48 hours gives you space to breathe between non-urgent projects, and it also sets up a rhythm of communication so your interlocutor no longer expects you to reply instantaneously. You can either train someone to expect instantaneous answers at all times, or to learn the rhythm that's best for you and your business.
- E. One of the best ways to avoid colour trends is of course to avoid wild colours altogether. A palette of pale tones is as close to time-proof as you can get, especially if you use a lot of classic white. A pastel palette doesn't have to be boring, either. Include rich textures (like woods and plush fabrics) and subtly different neutral shades to give a space life without introducing any dramatic colours that may or may not stand the test of time. Cool and warm whites can suit whatever colour scheme you might like in future.
- F. An optimal study or office is a space with no interruptions and an atmosphere that allows calm focus. This is a place for you to concentrate, expand on ideas and complete your work, be it creative or analytical. An office is supposed to nurture your line of thought and support action. Blue is versatile — it helps you feel calm and effective. It is associated with the sky, ocean, and water. Researchers claim it that people working in blue office spaces feel calm and hopeful about their work.

G. Having more recipients in the "To" field does not mean that you'll necessarily get more answers. In the age of digital marketing, people who blast messages in broadcast form without understanding who is in the "To" line reduce their chances of a message being opened. A perfect email is the one that's sent to exactly who it needs to go to. The more specific you can get about who should be receiving the message, the better. One direct ask that results in a "Yes" is better than spamming the inboxes of 50 people who don't respond.

What it's really like to be a bike commuter

No discussion of transportation in New York would be complete without talking about one of the cheapest, easiest and, increasingly, most popular ways of getting around the city — biking.

About 450,000 bike trips are taken every day in the five boroughs, with one in five of those trips being taken by someone who's commuting. There are now more than 1,000 bike lanes in the city, a number that has doubled lately compared to what we had a decade ago.

I was a freelancer and I literally couldn't afford to take the train some days I had to come into the office, so it made financial sense to invest in a cheap bike. Once I started riding, I preferred it to the train. It was faster and more fun. The best part of biking for me is the joy of experiencing the natural beauty of this island every day, and the feeling of being in control of your own destiny. I know roughly how long it will take me to get from Point A to Point B without issue. It is better than caffeine in the morning and I look forward to the ride home every day no matter how tired I am. I am energized by the experience and it keeps me in shape. It saves me money. It gets my blood and endorphins flowing.

Biking is becoming more popular among New Yorkers; 40 % supported the expansion of protected bike paths in the city. This doesn't mean that everything is completely rosy for bike commuters in New York City. While things are getting better, there's more the city could do to make its streets safer.

Pedestrians, without a question, are the biggest challenge you face while riding. Drivers are predictable; they follow the rules of traffic and they don't want to hit you any more than you want to hit them. Pedestrians are chaotic. They cross when they shouldn't. They'll walk in bike lanes with their backs facing bike traffic. They'll step into a bike lane three feet in front of you in the middle of the block so you'll have no reaction time — that is precisely what sent me to hospital with a mild concussion a few years back (I was okay, I managed to get back on my bike and ride).

Pedestrian education and citations is what we need to make cycling (and walking) safer in New York. Pedestrians, especially tourists, need to know about the existence of bike lanes, and that if they walk into a bike lane, they will get ticketed, hurt, or killed. They should have instructional videos at every major airport. I'm inclined to say folks from non-major U.S. cities are less likely to be familiar with bike lanes than tourists from around the world.

I think most people don't respect cyclists and their safety. I don't think most pedestrians and motorists understand what cyclists go through on a daily basis. Everyone should be required to cycle, walk, and drive at least one entire day in this city in order to build some mutual respect. Looking before you open your door, before you cross the street, before you make a U-turn, using your turn signal, etc., would make the cycling experience much safer for everyone — including motorists and pedestrians.

The city should be friendlier to cyclists because we reduce car and train traffic exponentially. Those LED signs that tell you that there will be traffic delays? Maybe they can say to check for cyclists before exiting the car.

12 According to the article, biking in NYC is...

- 1) as expensive as other types of transport.
- 2) mostly done by those who get to work daily.
- 3) preferred by more and more people.
- 4) especially popular in certain districts.

| <ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. The same conversation 2. Know-it-all backpackers 3. Anti-social behaviour 4. Backpacking as a lifestyle | <ol style="list-style-type: none"> 5. A five-minute friend 6. Who is a better traveller? 7. Too much partying 8. The herd mentality |
- A. Whenever you arrive somewhere new, travellers ask you five questions: Where are you from? Where are you going? Where have you been? How long are you travelling for? How long are you here? After five years — no, after the first five days — it's pretty boring having to talk about it over and over again. It becomes second nature. However, I mix it up now. When I get asked one of these questions, I reply by asking what's their favourite colour or least favourite place they have ever seen. It is better than "what do you do back home?"
- B. You meet great people — and then tomorrow they are gone. Maybe you will see each other again, maybe not. It's great meeting so many amazing people on the road, but I hate how everyone is always leaving, especially just as you get to know someone. It's a snowball of sadness. I've met countless amazing people on the road, and sure, in that moment and in that time, that was fun. Maybe that was all that was meant to be. But it's nice to have some consistency and have a friend for a little longer than that.
- C. In the backpacking world, it's always someone's first or last night and therefore a reason to go out — which means there's a lot of fun going on. I've done my fair share of celebrating, and I'll admit that it's great when you are just starting out. You are excited about the road, everything is new, and it's a good way to meet people. But after a few months, it gets boring and repetitive. You get weary of just having fun all the time, as though that is the only activity in the world. Can't we just go and do something else?
- D. There is always someone who has travelled more than you. Even after five years of backpacking the world, I know people who have spent six, seven, eight years with nothing but a backpack. However, I hate when without being asked people start to give their opinion about where others should or shouldn't go. Or they begin to tell you the history of a place to try to "educate" you on how things really are. No one likes a show-off. I often refrain from correcting people simply because I don't want to be "that guy."
- E. I've been backpacking for over five years now. That's a long time to travel period, let alone stay in dorm rooms, live out of the same backpack, and travel on the cheap. Most days, I love this style of travel and I love backpacking. It's fun and social, and you get to meet amazing people. But sometimes, the little things just grind your gears, which is most often when people are rude and inconsiderate. Backpacking is a great way of living, and like any way of life it has its ups and downs. I'm just lucky it has more ups than downs.
- F. I wanted to be a backpacker because they embodied a spirit of adventure and discovery. They were out to see the world, discover its hidden secrets, and meet new locals. Turns out, that's often not the case. More often than not, backpackers today follow the same well-laid travel route that thousands have tread before them. They simply follow the pack. Popular places are popular for a reason, and I would never suggest skipping Thailand or Paris. But be a bit more curious and wander off somewhere random.

- G. Too many travellers like to talk themselves up by discussing how long they have travelled for or how many countries they have been to, as though traveling is a competition. They sew flags to their bags and backpacks from every country they've been to. They do it to let people know how awesome they are for having been to so many places. "You've been to 20 countries?" "I've been to 37!" It doesn't actually matter if you have been to 4, 19, or 150 countries — everyone's journey is their own and all are equal.

Solar power creates a sunny outlook for everyone

My parents chose to buy and install solar panels on our home. The process was absolutely painless. Our bill just after this first month was $100 less than we budgeted for, which, needless to say, is very nice. I never thought we would wait for our electric bill to come, but now we welcome it.

Solar power produces no harmful emissions to the environment. In addition to being ecofriendly, solar energy is renewable, abundant, sustainable, not needing much effort or money, and always improving. For as long as the sun is alive, it is possible for us to get solar energy, so we should use it.

With major companies such as Google and Amazon using it, solar energy is earning its place in the sun. Renewable energy (solar power, wind power, etc.) has gone up in the U.S. energy mix greatly over the past 10 years. Because big businesses are taking advantage of solar energy, many of their suppliers have gone down the same path. Apple reported last month that because of its 100 % commitment to renewable energy, nearly two dozen suppliers of batteries, keyboards, and lenses have done the same thing.

But solar power doesn't have to be limited to businesses, and it shouldn't be. Using solar energy in houses and at colleges is an easy way for us to assist in saving nature. Powering a home by the sun is not much more expensive than paying a regular electric bill, and just a few extra dollars could help save the environment. Many homeowners face anxiety when it comes to their electricity bills because, in most cases, there is nothing you can do to control your utility electricity rate. While the cost of solar has decreased by more than 70 % in the past decade, the cost of electricity has risen by about 5 %, and that trend in rising electric cost is expected to continue. Going solar puts you in the driver's seat when it comes to energy generation.

Using solar power at colleges is certainly beneficial to the environment, but it would also be advantageous to the households themselves. The average home sale price increases if solar panels are included. A study concludes that "homes with solar panels sell 20 % faster and for 17 % more money".

Colleges can be benefactors of solar energy, too. If the college's newest residence hall were to go entirely solar, students would only pay roughly 52 extra cents per year, given that the residence hall is filled to capacity.

For colleges, investing in clean-energy projects would be a large pull for many students. As a generation highly affected by climate change, young people are interested in making a difference. A survey found that almost half of young people think climate change and the destruction of nature is the most critical issue, followed by large scale conflicts or wars and inequality.

Colleges are quite equipped to lead the solar-energy change (flat roofs, high population, etc.). Our college specifically has already invested in solar-energy projects on campus. By continuing to increase the number of solar-powered buildings on campus, the conversation around solar energy could be seriously redirected.

With its benefits rapidly multiplying for all parties involved in its use, it is solar energy's time to shine.

- A. Playing sports offers many personal, social and health advantages, including the development of better strength, endurance, overall fitness and increased relationship opportunities. Soccer, for example, offers much aerobic exercise. For young people, playing sports also reduces the amount of idle time that could get teens into trouble. Sports can be an escape from peer pressure and a stress relief for some participants.
- B. As a main component of total fitness, power is crucial for success in sports such as boxing, baseball, football, and track and field. Power gives athletes the explosive ability to run faster and jump higher, and it can be improved by lifting weights, running against resistance and performing exercises, such as depth jumps or medicine ball throws. Power in sports is the capacity to apply maximum force as quickly as possible.
- C. There are a few clearly identified disadvantages of playing sports. They are increasing the risk of injury, adding a lot of pressure, developing aggression and the large investment of time. The constant pressure to perform at peak levels and win can cause emotional disturbances or even drug and alcohol abuse. Moreover, many hours away from families lead to loneliness and depression for athletes.
- D. The intense competition and the lure of big rewards foster a spirit of aggression and unruly behaviour. In most cases this is confined to relatively harmless forms of aggression, such as swearing or name calling. However, there are many recorded instances of cruelty and serious bodily harm arising out of anger against fellow players and referees. Sometimes athletes are targeted for attack by disappointed fans.
- E. As of 2014, soccer remains the world's most popular sport. The game is played by an estimated 250 million athletes in over 200 countries around the world with as many as 3.5 billion followers across the globe. Soccer accounted for roughly 43 % of global sports market income. With more than 700 million global viewers, the sport's 32-team FIFA World Cup is the world's biggest sporting competition.
- F. Sports are often a bridge to form new friendships with people someone might not have met otherwise. Different cultures and religions can come together through sporting activities and start friendships that translate into everyday life. In addition, a stronger relationship with family members can occur from participation in sports. Family members attend sporting events of their loved ones to show them support and love.

G. According to the Palo Alto Medical Foundation, participation in sports encourages people to change their diet. It is essential to eat a balanced diet while doing sports. A lot of energy is used, so it is necessary to choose healthy food and stay hydrated. The diet should include enough fats, minerals, vitamins, proteins and complex carbohydrates. Thanks to a balanced diet, athletes are in shape at all times.

The other day, my friend Nicky was reflecting on what kind of a job she had done as a mother. Her three boys had completed their education without major mishaps, all were now holding down a job. Result! “Then I had dinner with them,” said Nicky, “and, oh my God, their table manners. It was like feeding time at the zoo. How did I forget to do table manners?”

Nicky made me think about the state of dining etiquette at my home. The Daughter has never quite mastered putting her knife and fork together at the end of a meal. The Boy eats like Henry VIII, and I don’t mean in an impressive, regal manner. A sausage will be speared on a fork, then lifted up and gnawed from either end. Tom who, after 15 years of nagging, chiding and pleading, is almost a complete stranger to the knife, despite many attempts to explain that it’s the thing you use to cut stuff up. My son will attempt to eat any foodstuff by fork — or hand — alone. Judging by his peer group, the knife is increasingly regarded as an optional implement. A finger buffet used to be something you found at weddings; now all of life is one long finger buffet.

Frankly, I blame myself. I managed to drum please and thank you into both children but, instead of insisting that they ate meat, I fed them the new childhood staples: carrots, rice, pasta and sauce. Knives not required.

Over Sunday lunch last week, I encouraged the Boy to swap the fork into his left hand, hold the knife in his right and push his peas onto the back of the fork. Not too much to ask, is it? He gave an existential snort as befits a teenager. “Why would I want to do that?” he inquired. “Because. Because table manners are... very important,” I said helplessly.

Are they? Of course, they are. Manners make the man. At least, that’s what I was taught during a childhood when every meal was an ordeal. Elbows Off The Table! Don’t Speak With Your Mouth Full! Don’t Hold Your Knife Like a Pen! Ask Before You Get Down From The Table! Don’t Chew Noisily! Where’s Your Napkin?

And God help you if you didn’t clear your plate. We were the children of frugal, wartime children and food was a serious business, not to be played with or wasted. Back then, there was no such thing as a fussy eater: you were shut in a room with five brussels sprouts till you surrendered.

Parents today lack both the stomach, and the time, for such a battle of wills. Carolyn, a primary teacher who works at one of London’s leading prep schools, tells me that it’s not uncommon for pupils to arrive unable to use cutlery. Partly, she thinks it has to do with being given constant finger food.

I can, however, identify another possible culprit: the kitchen island. It’s not unusual to find all members of a family, adults and kids, standing round the island, grazing on different types of food. They can’t be bothered to sit down at the table; if they still have one, that is. According to recent research, six out of ten meals consumed in British homes are eaten in front of the TV. Fortunately, there are no statistics for barbarians like mine who are quite happy to eat in bed.

Is all this the end of civilization as we know it or just a changing family dynamic with more casual ways of eating? Will my darling son ever learn to put his peas on the back of a fork and be acceptable in polite society, or is polite society now rudely picking up fries with its fingers?

I will always nag my kids about such things because they are an expression of civility, restraint and, yes, my mother was quite right: speaking with your mouth full is not nice.

| 1. Farming in a city | 5. A dangerous garden |
| 2. A fortune for a flower | 6. A popular indoor plant |
| 3. Useful garden space | 7. National strategy |
| 4. Development of farming | 8. The globe's favourite flower |
- A. Inside northern England's Alnwick Garden lies a curious, highly-guarded area where the last thing a visitor will want to do is tiptoe through the tulips. Surrounded by a heavy iron fence, the Poison Garden showcases over 100 of the world's most deadly plants. In addition to not touching the plants, tourists are also advised to avoid even smelling the plants, as the fumes from certain plants have caused a few visitors to faint.
- B. A rain garden is an attractive landscaped area placed in a lawn to take advantage of large amounts of rainwater. Rain gardens slow the movement of rainwater, allowing the nutrients contained in rainwater to soak back into the soil, and prevent soil erosion. Not only do these garden areas provide a lot of benefits for a garden, attracting birds, butterflies and bees, they are also very beautiful.
- C. During World War II, the U.S. government encouraged citizens to grow their own fruit and vegetables in "victory gardens" to help to prevent food shortage, as much of the nation's food supply was diverted to the military. The United States was home to approximately 20 million victory gardens in the early 1940s, and it is estimated that these gardens accounted for 30 to 40 % of all vegetables in the U.S.
- D. Urban agriculture is a broad term that refers to agricultural practice taking place in a densely populated area, such as towns or large suburbs. Although urban agriculture typically does not occur on the same large scale as rural agriculture, it includes the same variety of activities. For example, a person who lives in a town and keeps a chicken coop in his or her front lawn is taking part in urban agriculture.
- E. The rose is the most popular flower in the U.S. and in the world, according to the National Gardening Association. It is grown all over the world, and it is the most popular flower given as a gift. Flower experts speculate that the rose's popularity stems from its wide variety of colours, sizes and fragrances. It is used to symbolize love, beauty, war, peace and politics. There are approximately 150 rose species in the world.
- F. When the tulip was imported to Holland from Turkey in the late 16th century, the Dutch enthusiasm for the flower caused a dramatic price inflation that crashed in the end. It created an economic depression that had a long-lasting impact on the Dutch economy during the 17th century. Prices for tulips had become so great that a single bulb could sell for more than a working-class person would take home in a year.

- G. People need to eat, and agriculture provides almost all of the food people demand. It also allows a small group of people to produce enough food for many more. Through the years, agriculture has become more and more efficient, and only a small percentage of the world's population works in the agriculture sector. Hybrid seeds and selective breeding mean that modern yields are far larger than ever before.

A great ESL teacher

Being an ESL student — English as a second language — can be a painful experience. Many of us who have been ESL students know what it's like to get pulled out of class in front of everyone, so you can learn to master the verbs and retrain your tongue to twist differently from what your parents taught you. What you need is a great teacher who lets you make mistakes.

"It takes a lot for any student," Whaley explains, "especially for a student who is learning English as their new language, to feel confident enough to say, 'I don't know, but I want to know.'"

Impeccably dressed, with a gravelly Long Island accent that turns one vowel into many, Whaley does not look like the kind of guy that dabbles in magic markers. Before he was a second-grade teacher, he worked at a public relations company in New York City. He says he started thinking about doing something else while riding to and from work on the Long Island Rail Road. "I would talk with people on the train at 6 a.m. and 8 p.m. on the way home," he recalls. "They were people who had a complete disconnect from the young people of the world. They were all so focused on adults and the rat race. And I realised that this was not for me." That was 16 years ago. He has been teaching ever since. In addition, Whaley has found time to write a novel called Leaving Montana, and he's starting to write children's books. Last year, he won the New York state teacher-of-the-year award.

This second-grade presidential campaign is an example of why. He tells me he got the idea when he asked the children one day to raise their hands if they thought they could never be a U.S. president. The answer broke his heart. "Almost every single child who is an English-language learner believed that they couldn't be," Whaley recalls. Whaley says the presidential speech project is about more than just learning to read and speak in public. He wants these kids to learn to boast about themselves. "Bragging about yourself, and your best qualities," Whaley says, "is very difficult for a child who came into the classroom not feeling any confidence whatsoever to read three or four words."

It's not an easy job, juggling native speakers' needs with those of the ESL students. There are a lot of late afternoons and coming in early. On one Tuesday morning, I drive through Long Island before the traffic gets bad. The school is quiet, except for Whaley's class. Many of the parents have dropped their kids off early, and Whaley is here with them.

"A tall metal lady stands on Liberty Island on New York Harbor," he reads, his voice booming into the empty hallway. Today his students are learning about a history they are now a part of. "Last but not least 'immigrants,'" says Whaley. "Now this is a very important word, because we've been learning about our ancestors."

Whaley himself is the grandchild of Italian immigrants who settled in Long Island. He tells me he often finds himself wishing they'd taught him to speak Italian, so he could be bilingual, like many of his students.

"Did all of our ancestors always live in the United States of America?" he asks.

There's a collective, "No."

"My mom and my dad were born in Ecuador," chimes in one girl.

"There you go," Whaley says. "So a lot of your ancestors are from Ecuador. They were all this word: immigrant. Immigrants. Someone who comes from a different country, to a new country ..."

"To live a better life," the little girl interrupts him.

Установите соответствие между текстами A–G и заголовками 1–8. Занесите свои ответы в таблицу. Используйте каждую цифру только один раз. В задании один заголовок лишний.

1. Unexpected presents
2. Showing gratitude
3. Housewarming gifts
4. What to put in a bag

5. An online gift
6. Office rules for giving gifts
7. Gifts to match interests
8. Shopping for presents

- A. Depending on the event, gift bags can be altered to suit almost any occasion. The first thing to do when planning gifts is to think about the environment of the event being held. It's great to include anything that guests may need at the venue. If the event is held outdoors, one can choose some items that may be useful for a day spent in the sun. Another angle to take on gift bags is to include the host's favourite things.
- B. In general, employees should avoid giving gifts to a boss, however, a card may be acceptable. Workers can seem as though they are trying to buy job favours if they purchase anything valuable. Group gifts are considered more proper than individual ones supposing the entire staff agrees. If co-workers are not interested in contributing a present, an individual can give small gifts to all colleagues, including the boss.
- C. A time-honoured Russian folk custom welcomes the new homeowners with bread and salt, revealing the wish that the kitchen cupboard is always full. A breakfast basket filled with eggs, coffee, tea, cream, jam and orange juice is a great way to welcome a new neighbour on the moving day. Another traditional gift for new apartment owners is a useful picture-hanging kit that includes a hammer, wire, nails and hooks.
- D. Gift cards are very common today. Depending on the website, a gift card could be an actual card mailed to a recipient, or an electronic card that can be printed out. The electronic gift card also comes in different designs and is delivered by email. It may be used for Internet shopping or printed out and used at a store. Another option is to upload a photo that is used to create a personalized gift card together with a greeting card.
- E. Hobby gifts are considered to be the best retirement gift ideas. Often, retirees are interested in a hobby, such as golf, gardening, fishing or painting. A good gift for such retirees are materials that can be useful in their hobby, such as books, paints or fishing gear. Another option is purchasing a series of classes, time on a golf course or a park permit. The gift-giver can also arrange time to enjoy the hobby together.
- F. It is a good idea to give someone a gift by surprise. If the person waits for a gift, it is great to let someone else deliver the gift instead. Deliveries by a small child, a pet or a neighbour are some options to consider. Another way to surprise someone is by wrapping the gift in something strange. A package that looks poorly done may be a good way to wrap a nice gift. Careful planning is the key to achieving success in this undertaking.

G. It is always wise to write a thank you note for a present by hand, with sincerity and as soon as possible. Anyone writing a thank you note on a pre-printed card should add handwriting to make the note more personal. A nice thank you note shows appreciation for the present. A brief note or two about what is special or most valued about the present lets the gift-giver know why that particular present was a good choice.

Non-drivers in the UK

My name is Andrew and I'm a non-driver. I don't drive motorised vehicles known as cars. I can, but I won't. I probably should, but I don't. I'm a non-driver.

For a skill that in terms of human history is still relatively new — it's approximately 127 years since automobiles were available to the public — driving is considered innate. "You don't drive?" people say, quizzically. As a form of defence I have developed a few retorts. But for all the bravado, I feel like a good-for-nothing.

So accustomed are we to the idea of being able to control a complex piece of machinery at high speeds, that we never mention it. You never hear: "Meet my husband... he's a driver, don't you know!" It is only the non-drivers that are afforded special demarcation. I'm also a non-racist, a non-astronaut and a non-morris dancer, but nobody cares about all of that.

80 % of UK men eligible for a driving licence have one. However, there are some five million males — including myself — who will never drive our partners home from dinner parties. Quite a lot of us will not do so because we find it too scary. There is no medical term for the phobia of driving, which let's face it is a pretty rational fear, unlike say, balloons (globophobia) or felt (textophobia). We are simply "the nameless".

Even in today's liberated age, the idea of a non-driving woman is still fine, but Driving Mr Daisy is not. Aside from people so powerful, they don't have time to drive, because they're busy writing film scripts in the back of limos, the rest of us have to drive. If we don't, society raises a collective eyebrow. Why the big deal? It's only driving! In car ads, however, the notion of driving is presented as being cool, exciting and manly. Hardly any other form of potentially fatal human activity is so casually and misleadingly glossed up.

I know that statistically my fear is irrational, so why have I made my life so difficult? Well, I hated driving lessons, even though I passed first time. On hearing the news, I sniggered: "Are you sure?" I then moved from Norwich to London, where a large proportion of friends and colleagues either couldn't or didn't drive. It wasn't an issue, but as the years went by the idea of getting back behind the wheel became more and more terrifying. Scientists believe that younger men, particularly teenagers, have virtually no sense of mortality and as such the emerging ego regularly tries to "cheat death" in order to gain social standing. I don't think I ever had that mindset, and I certainly don't have it now. I have a "life wish".

So what is life like as a non-driver? Well, it's socially awkward. Often, I feel absolutely stupid. My four-year-old daughter recently pointed at a car being driven down the road and roared: "That car was driven by a man. Men don't drive cars!" I went red. Thank God, I don't have a son, I thought.

Another time I was asked to move the family car a few yards back, while my wife had popped into a shop, and I found myself shaking like a leaf. "I can't move it!" I mumbled with an apologetic shrug. "You'll have to shoot me."

There are benefits, of course. Being a non-driver means I simply don't understand Top Gear, something I see as a gift. It also means I don't get upset by fuel prices, car parks or speed cameras. But, hands-up, I wish I did drive. I want to drive to experience the oft-cited freedom of the road. I often think of all things I have missed. The routes and journeys my life could have taken if I had been less dependent on Tubes, buses and cabs.

12 Being a non-driver, the author feels...

1) sarcastic.

2) confused.

3) surprised.

4) worthless.

Ответ:

13 It is implied that driving is...

- 1) a skill everybody expects you to have.
- 2) a competence people are proud of.
- 3) not important compared to other skills.
- 4) a sign of a person's well-being.

Ответ:

14 What does NOT characterize the situation in the UK, according to the author?

- 1) Men are more likely to be able to drive than women.
- 2) The majority of males have a fear of driving.
- 3) Driving is advertised in an attractive way.
- 4) Driving is a necessity unless you are rich.

Ответ:

- 1) made absolutely necessary.
- 2) given a shiny appearance.
- 3) given less importance.

Ответ:

- 1) He had difficulties with his driving test.
- 2) He got into a car accident as a teenager.

- 1) it is embarrassing not to drive.
- 2) driving can be very dangerous.
- 3) girls do not need to drive a car.
- 4) his fear of driving is irrational.

Ответ:

18 What is the author's overall attitude to his inability to drive?

- 1) He finds a lot of advantages in it.
- 2) He does not let it upset him.
- 3) He regrets being unable to drive.
- 4) He wishes he could enjoy programmes for drivers.

Time management is very important for students. When you are in college, you will be taking several classes at a time. Within each class, you'll have assignments and tests with different due dates. It can become really difficult if you are not good at time management. We recommend to write down all your deadlines ahead of time on a calendar, or even on a sheet of paper. This way, you can schedule study time and time to work on assignments according to what is due first. A weekly checklist can also help to better manage your time when you are in college. Here's how it can work. At the start of each week, write down the assignments and projects that are upcoming for that week. You may even use different colours for different subjects. By looking at the checklist, you will make sure that no item is forgotten or overlooked.

Ice hockey has a long history. It started on frozen lakes and rivers of Canadian winters in the 19th century. Now the games are played at high-tech arenas before 20,000 fans and are shown on TV. Though the rules and equipment have changed through the sport's 128-year history, the spirit of the game remains the same. Hockey has always been a sport of speed and grace mixed with a certain amount of violence.

That combination has proven irresistible to fans for over a century. A crowd of 5,000 reportedly watched the first ever Stanley Cup competition in 1893. During the 2002/2003 season, attendance at national Hockey League games topped 20 million. The history of hockey holds more than just changing rules and regulations. A host of colourful characters, interesting traditions, and strange events mark hockey's timeline.

With the rise in recent technology we seem to be rapidly losing the art of conversation. Talking on the phone used to be the means of communication for most people, but over the last 20 years texting or instant messaging has developed into one of the most popular ways of keeping in touch with friends and family. Recent studies have shown that people are more likely to text than actually talk. Texting is great for quick short messages and meaningless banter. But it is very difficult to have a deep and meaningful text conversation. Firstly, you cannot hear the intonation when someone is texting you. Secondly, texting lacks eye contact and body language, which are crucial facets of face-to-face communication. So, whatever is happening in your world, put that mobile phone down and talk to someone before you forget how.

The fashion industry is considered to be one of the fastest-growing industries today, yet it has faced some significant challenges throughout its history. It's not a secret that fashion industry takes its negative toll on the environment. Clothes production cannot cope with limited water consumption, and its carbon footprint increases daily. People buy tons of cheap garments which end up in landfills in less than a month. The situation might get worse if consumers don't change their habits in the coming years.

There are some healthy fashion trends that may help to make fashion sustainable. Consumers are choosing brands that do not hurt animals and the planet in the process. The younger generation chooses second-hand shopping giving clothes another life. And brands promote recycling to save on raw material and natural resources.

A polar bear walks along a rocky shore, looking for food. The bear would usually be on the sea ice hunting for seals, pouncing when the seal comes up to breathe. But the ice has started to melt earlier and re-form later than it was in the past. Without the sea ice, the polar bear must scavenge for other, less nutritious food. These changes in polar sea ice are a result of climate change. But this isn't just affecting polar bears — climate change affects everyone. Changes in Earth's climate are caused by how much of the Sun's energy is absorbed by the atmosphere. In fact, over the past 650,000 years, our planet has gone through seven ice ages and warming periods. But during the past few hundred years, oil, gas, and coal have powered homes, cars, and factories. That increases Earth's temperature, which contributes to the planet's warming.

The turn of the century has been fruitful for the rise of the fashion industry, especially the fast fashion segment. In the last 20 years it increased by about 60 %, with people spending more money on cheaper garments. Brands cut their production cycles and turn to up-to-the-minute designs doing their best to expand and refresh their customers' wardrobes.

However, not everything is cream and peaches in the fashion industry. It requires using a lot of water and chemicals while emitting significant amounts of greenhouse gases into the atmosphere. Clothing-factory workers work in unsafe conditions and are often underpaid. Some consumers tend to overlook or tolerate these costs of fast fashion, while others expect brands to operate in a different manner. To meet their demands, companies do their best to change their production methods.

Even though you might think that global warming is not a burning issue, there are many dangers. The gradual heating of Earth's surface, oceans and atmosphere is something that is happening in real life in many places. The consequences and effects of global warming are measurable and visible. Scientists report that ice is melting in both polar ice caps and mountain glaciers. Lakes around the world are warming rapidly changing animals' migration patterns and plants' blooming dates. The most immediate and obvious consequence of global warming is the increase in temperatures around the world. As global average temperatures warm, weather patterns are changing. These changes will likely include major shifts in wind patterns, annual precipitation, and seasonal temperature variations.

Football (or soccer as the game is called in some parts of the world) has a long history. Football in its current form arose in England in the middle of the 19th century. But alternative versions of the game existed much earlier and are a part of the football history.

The first known examples of a team game involving a ball, which was made out of a rock, occurred in ancient cultures over 3,000 years ago in pre-Columbian America. In some ritual occasions, the ball would symbolize the sun and the captain of the losing team would be sacrificed to the gods. A unique feature of these ball game versions was a bouncing ball made of rubber — no other early culture had access to rubber.

The first known ball game which also involved kicking took place in China in the 3rd century BC. It was played with a round ball on an area of a square.

An allergy is your immune system's reaction to certain plants, animals, foods, insect bites, or other things. Your immune system protects you from diseases by fighting germs like bacteria and viruses. But when you have allergies, it overreacts and tries to "fight" ordinary things like grass or certain foods. This causes the sneezing, itching, and other reactions that you get with allergies.

People may be born with a genetic tendency to have allergies, which means they are more likely to get them than other people are. Many allergies are passed to kids in the genes they get from their parents. You have a better chance of having allergies if your mom or dad or other people in your family have them.

Sometimes it's difficult to tell the difference between a cold and an allergy because the symptoms can be similar. If your cold symptoms last more than 2 weeks, you probably have an allergy and not a cold.

Arctic foxes live on the land and sea ice within the Arctic Circle. Winter in the Arctic is unlike winter in most parts of the world. From October to February, the sun never rises to shine warmth and light.

Luckily, these small foxes have some useful adaptations for living in the icy Arctic. Their long, fluffy tails act like a blanket, keeping the fox warm when it wraps the tail around its body to sleep. Their feet also have a layer of thick fur, like built-in snow boots. This helps muffle an arctic fox's footsteps, making it harder for prey to hear them. And their white coats make it difficult for predators such as wolves, polar bears, and golden eagles to spot them among the ice and snow.

When it's not trying to keep warm or avoid predators, an arctic fox is on the hunt for food. They prefer to eat small rodents called lemmings, but when times are tough, they'll eat whatever they can find: insects and berries.

If you're not familiar with the Isle of Man, it's a green and pleasant island nation in the middle of the Irish Sea. At only about thirty miles long, it has an incredible choice of things to do and see — especially if you're a fan of beautiful landscapes. A day trip around the Island can have you take in diverse and stunning landscapes and fascinating historical sites. For such a calm and peaceful island, it has a long history of conquest, kings, and ancient peoples.

If you head all the way north, you'll get to the Point of Ayre. There you'll find a picturesque lighthouse on a long and open rocky beach.

The first human carrying flight technology was the hot air balloon. While unmanned balloons have been around in some form for thousands of years, the first flight with people on board was in 1782.

The large balloon on top is called an “envelope”. It holds hot air created by a heat source known as a burner. The burner creates an open flame by burning a mix of propane and air. Hot air balloons are capable of floating because the hot air inside the envelope has a lower density than the colder air outside. The top of the balloon usually has a vent which allows the pilot to control the speed of ascent or descent. Passengers typically stand in a basket beneath the envelope.

While most envelopes have a standard balloon shape, others are designed to look like animals, cartoon characters and other fun objects.

Everyone loves hobbits. Ask anyone who's a fan of The Lord of the Rings to choose their favourite character and nine times out of ten it will be Samwise Gamgee. He's loyal, innocent and determined and without him Frodo couldn't have saved Middle Earth. He represents the Shire with all its comfort, safety and stability and these same attributes make Hobbit Holes special.

For those whose hearts belong forever in the Shire, there's a place they can go to. Called Hobbiton, it's a movie set experience that's nestled in the heart of a small town in New Zealand. Lush pastures are punctuated with 44 tiny Hobbit holes, the Green Dragon Pub, Mill, double arched bridge and the famous Party Tree built directly into the sides of rolling hills. The daily tours allow visitors to enter the small lairs and pretend they're one of the mythical humanoids.

Our world is full of mysteries. There are stunning icebergs, roaring waterfalls, dashing jungles and many more. There are also singing sands in Kazakhstan. "Singing sands" is the name of big dunes that produce various sounds in dry weather.

The sounds can be heard several miles away and resemble sometimes organ music and sometimes the roars of an aircraft engine. According to local legends, such sounds are songs of desert ghosts and voices of fabulous beasts. Scientists however think that the grains of sands create those sounds as they rub against each other under a wind force.

Another miracle can be seen in the Antarctic. These are waves frozen in the air. Of course, it is not a real tsunami. Water cannot freeze instantly and in motion, even in the freezing temperatures. This ice begins to melt in summer and then freezes again — many years in a row forming natural sculptures for centuries.

High in bamboo forests in the rainy mountains of China lives one of the world's rarest mammals: the giant panda. Only about 1,500 of these black-and-white relatives of bears survive in the wild.

Pandas eat almost nothing but bamboo shoots and leaves. Occasionally they eat other vegetation, fish, or small animals, but bamboo accounts for 99 % of their diets. Pandas eat fast, they eat a lot, and they spend about 12 hours a day doing it. The reason is they digest only a fifth of what they eat. Overall, bamboo is not very nutritious. To stay healthy, they have to eat a lot.

The shape of teeth helps pandas crush bamboo shoots and leaves. To get the bamboo to their mouths, they hold it with their front paws. A panda should have at least two bamboo species where it lives, or it will starve. A lack of bamboo threatens the limited panda population.

People have always told stories and legends to explain natural, but mysterious, occurrences such as the Northern Lights. The Vikings believed the Northern Lights were caused by the shining weapons of warriors. The Alaskan people thought the lights were the souls of salmon, deer and other animals. The Indians told the stories of giants living in the North and thought the lights were their torches. The Northern Lights are actually caused by electrons from solar winds. They are attracted to the poles by the magnetic fields found there. They mix with gases in the atmosphere which causes the gases to glow. The Northern Lights are most visible in the far north. They are typically green, purple, red or blue.

The life of Indians is centered in the family. Extended families often live together, with two or more adult generations, or brothers, sharing a house. In much of the countryside, neighboring houses share a wall, so from the street one sees a continuous wall pierced by doorways. In other areas, in the south for example, the main house will have a veranda on the street, with an open courtyard behind. As people get richer, they introduce improvements like tiled roofs to their houses. Most home activity is outside in the compound courtyard or on the verandas of the house.

Only in a few parts of India do people live on their farmland. The village is thus a settlement area, or a set of settlement areas, surrounded by unbroken fields, with farms frequently made up of separated plots. A large village will have a primary school, and a small shop or two.

Japan is an island nation in East Asia, located in the North Pacific Ocean off the coast of the Asian continent. Japan comprises the four main islands in addition to numerous smaller islands. Tokyo is the country's capital and largest city. Mountains dominate Japan's landscape, covering 75 to 80 % of the country. Historically, the mountains were barriers to transportation, limiting the economic development of isolated areas. However, with the development of tunnels, bridges, and air transportation in the modern era, the mountains are no longer an obstacle. The Japanese have long celebrated the beauty of their mountains in art and literature, and today many mountain areas are preserved in national parks. Most of Japan's people live on plains and lowlands found mainly along the lower courses of the country's major rivers, on the lowest slopes of mountain ranges, and along the sea coast. This concentration of people makes Japan one of the world's most crowded countries.

Canada's original inhabitants are Indians. The very name Canada comes from a word meaning "village" in one of the local languages of Indian tribes. These tribes had lived on the territory of modern Canada before the first Europeans arrived in the 11th century. More Europeans came in the 16th century and were made welcome because they brought manufactured goods and traded them for furs and other native products. The Europeans settled down and gradually displaced Indians over the next 250 years.

European settlers came in a series of waves. First were the French, followed by the English, and these two groups are considered the founding nations. France lost its part of the territory to Britain in a war in 1760, but most of the French-speaking colonists remained. Their effort to preserve their language and culture is still a continuing theme of Canadian history and has led in recent years to a movement to become independent from the rest of Canada.

Since ancient times, humans have loved and cherished cats as their pets. Today more than 65 million cats reside in Russian homes, with an estimated three cats for every dog on the planet. Yet there is still a lot we don't know about our feline friends — including what they think of their owners.

After observing pet cats for several years, scientists have come to an intriguing conclusion: cats don't really understand people the way dogs do. They tend to feel it is they who own their masters, not vice versa. On the contrary, dogs perceive people as being very different from themselves. As soon as they see a human, they change their behaviour. The way a dog plays with a human is completely different from the way it plays with a dog. Cats are independent creatures and they can easily change their owner without changing their habits.

Используйте каждое утверждение, обозначенное соответствующей цифрой, только один раз. В задании есть одно лишнее утверждение. Вы услышите запись дважды. Занесите свои ответы в таблицу. У вас есть 20 секунд, чтобы ознакомиться с заданием.

Now we are ready to start.

Speaker A

A gap year does not have to be an entirely study-free zone. I, for example, have decided to pursue an international Master's degree, so I need to invest some time in preparation. For programmes taught in English, applicants are usually required to submit an English proficiency test. Still, even if you do not have to sit any of these exams, compiling your Master's application alone may take up a considerable portion of your free time. Make sure to factor in these points when planning your gap year.

Speaker B

There isn't a hard and fast rule; it's different for everyone. For me, I was sick to death with classrooms, homework assignments, and education. I needed to get out. So, I took two years away and lived abroad. It was the best thing for me. When I got back to university, I was rejuvenated. I felt fresh and had a lot more motivation to concentrate on education, and not on social life. I find that going with your gut feeling usually works out best.

Speaker C

A lot of colleges actually like when their students take a gap year. They usually perform better, are more involved in school, and are more mature. They also have a better idea of what they want to do. It can show schools that you are intentional. Colleges also value the diversity of students. Taking a gap year and travelling can give you a much more diverse perspective than other students who have lived domestically their whole lives.

Speaker D

Personally, I really benefited from taking a gap year. During my senior year of high school, I decided to apply for an exchange programme based in Germany. After being accepted, I was put into a German high school and lived with a host family. My time abroad not only helped me learn German, but also boosted my social and adaptation skills. Overall, it gave me a new perspective on how I wanted to treat myself and those around me.

Speaker E

I think it's a good idea to apply to schools, get your scholarship information, and then talk to them about deferring your enrollment. This holds your spot, and your scholarships. It also takes the pain away from having to apply to schools during your gap year. And you always know if you have something you can come back to, which makes the gap year a little more freeing. Overall, it depends on whether or not a gap year is right for you. But when it comes to what schools think, you don't have to worry.

Speaker F

My gap year influenced my university choice, as I discovered I didn't like the American style of teaching. I also decided to switch what I wanted to major in university after finding a topic I was truly passionate about. I've only been studying at university for 2 years, but I'm extremely happy I took the opportunity of taking a gap year. I feel more motivated than I ever was in school, as now I have a major I'm excited to study. Without a gap year, I would've never made these decisions.

Peter: Hi, Mary! How were your holidays?

Mary: Hello, Peter! Hmm, let's say they could have been better.

Peter: Really? How come?

Mary: Everything started when I was late for my train to Warsaw. I spent hours in a traffic jam, and then a few more standing in queues at the check-in barriers at the station.

Peter: Wait, were you carrying anything illegal?

Mary: I sure wasn't. The terminal was so jammed that I could barely breathe, and it was located at the far end of the platform... Anyway, if you want to know if I made it — I didn't. The train departed and I was left standing at the platform. I had to pay twice as much to get a top bunk on the next one going to Warsaw through Berlin.

Peter: I hope that was the end of your troubles.

Mary: Are you kidding? That was just the beginning. I was going to meet my friends there, and they were responsible for our sleeping arrangements. The luxurious hotel they booked was not at all as grand as we expected. Our beds were not comfy, the paint was peeling off the ceiling now and then, and the bathroom was somewhat claustrophobic. Yet, shabby as it was, everything was spotless.

Peter: I suppose, you didn't spend a fortune on it, so you could have just grinned and borne it. I mean it's Warsaw after all! Did you at least go sightseeing?

Mary: We did, and that was the best part of the trip. We visited all the most touristic places: the historic Old Town, the Royal Castle, and many others.

Peter: That sounds fun! Did you spend a lot of time outdoors?

Mary: We didn't. The forecast wasn't that grim and we enjoyed the first couple of days, but then the weather deteriorated and stayed that way for the rest of the trip.

Peter: Oh, come on!

Mary: Rain was pouring down every time we were heading somewhere.

Peter: Such a pity. But it means that you spent a great deal of time indoors. Have you tried out some local delicacies?

Mary: Have you heard of Schnitzel?

Peter: Is it a kind of a pork chop, coated in egg and breadcrumbs, and fried in hot oil with onion?

Mary: It is. And it is often served with grated beetroot and mashed potatoes. It was undeniably delicious. And the portions were huge! We used to take one and share it between the three of us!

Peter: I thought there were four of you.

Mary: There were. But Astrid is vegetarian, so no pork for her.

Peter: I see. Well, at least you liked something!

Now we are ready to start.

Presenter: Good evening to you all and to our guest today, Joseph Evans.

Joseph Evans: Good evening.

Presenter: I don't think that I need to introduce Joseph, a well-known novelist whose first novel about two young poets brought him national attention. Joseph's The Swan Song won the National Book Critics Circle Award. And Joseph also won the Prize in Literature for children for his Mary's Tales. So, Joseph Evans is in our studio today.

Joseph Evans: Thank you, Sophie. Don't wait for me to blush at such an introduction, I did expect it. Your colleagues mentioned that you tend to start your shows like this, and you didn't disappoint me.

Presenter: I should say that I will not disappoint the audience either, and will start the show with my usual question: what inspired you to write Mary's Tales?

Joseph Evans: It was a young girl. She wrote me a letter and complained that all the stories she read about fairies and witches included perfect little lady-like creatures which were always polite and never said a word to defend themselves. And she didn't like that one little bit.

Presenter: Wow! So she gave you the idea, and you set off writing a story straight away?

Joseph Evans: I wish I did, but it took time to develop. Actually, it took a long time to decide how. I needed to discover the main characters first. They had to grow out of a seed, as my mom would say. This didn't happen for about three years. No, not three. I received the letter on the eve of my thirtieth birthday, and the book was published on the day of my thirty-fifth birthday.

Presenter: So — five years. You took your time, indeed.

Joseph Evans: I did.

Presenter: You did. But it was worth it, as your readers say. The heroes are not conventional at all. In fact, they are all quite flawed.

Joseph Evans: I think people who don't have faults are very boring. Your faults are a large part of what you are like as a person. And the aim of any writer should be to make what they write interesting. So, if I can't be interested in people with no faults, then neither can my readers. Mr Asparagus appealed to me because he is into both botanics and martial arts. And you must admit this is an odd combination. Laila is so sure of herself that you cannot pass by without paying her some attention. And of course Brighty is awesome because while other witches are polite and reliable, with her you never know what is going to happen next.

Presenter: This is so true. Your Brighty, the sorceress of the marshlands, has charmed many readers across the world. What do you make of that?

Joseph Evans: The one strange fact about Brighty is that almost every young man who reads about her wants to marry her. They do. They all confess their wish quite openly. The other day I was doing a question-and-answer session, and a teenage boy put his hand up and asked me if I would mind if he would marry Brighty when he comes of age.

Presenter: What did you say?

Joseph Evans: I wondered whether to ask him if he would mind everything being covered with frogs and lizards when the broomstick she was fixing went wrong. Or if he would mind being twisted round Brighty's little finger when she needed something. Or would it worry him that she was always falling in love with other men; or ... But I could see he regarded these facts as a test. So I told him to join the end of a very long queue of other young men and prepare himself to fight for what he desires.

Presenter: I guess this didn't appear to trouble him unduly, did it?

Joseph Evans: Not in the least. Personally, much as I love Brighty, she is the last person I would want to marry. I wouldn't like to live with a person who has a tendency to do the opposite of what you might expect.

Presenter: Luckily, Brighty finds Crawley and they make a spectacular team.

Joseph Evans: Yes, they do! Where Brighty is dashing and original, Crawley is quite practical. He is good at covering up Brighty's dashing blunders, in spite of disagreeing violently from time to time.

Presenter: Joseph, our listeners would like to know more about the book, and one of them is on the phone — but first a short commercial...

I think that the situation when parents are forcing teenagers to get a job is just terrible. High school hours are mostly from 6 to 3, or from 7 to 4, or somewhere in that range — it varies throughout the world. And you're trying to tell your child to go to work for 5-10 hours right after school? That is poor parenting. The struggles of school and the weight that comes with it — whether it is the workload, the tests, or depression from it all — are already enough.

Speaker B

My parents had a rule that school always came first. No job — because school was my job. In the summers I had to do something though. It was either more school, or some type of volunteer activities. I didn't have a job until my third year university summer, and felt prepared for adulthood just fine. I know parents do it to prepare for adulthood, but let your children enjoy their final years of childhood while they get ready for college (if they're going). It's no good applying extra stress onto them.

Speaker C

When I was in high school, I needed money for college and we didn't have a lot of money to go around. I was super eager to get a job, but my dad actually said to me, "Wait as long as you can before getting a job. Once you start working, you don't stop until you retire." All my friends started getting jobs at 14 or 16. I was 18 when I got my first "real" job (granted, I also worked for my mom's store and my dad's business and had summer jobs). I can't thank him enough for telling me it was okay.

Speaker D

I agree that making your children work from the time they get out of class until the end of the day is a little too much. I see no problem with a weekend job though. It does give some good experience in the work world, as well as giving kids some financial freedom. I had a weekend job in high school. So it felt amazing not to have to ask my mom to use her card whenever my friends wanted to get something to eat, or whenever I needed a new oil change for my car. I could just do it.

Speaker E

I worked at a hairdresser's and in a burger van in high school. The first experience at the hairdresser's in the mornings and in the summer was useful, I would say, to get experience and get me up in the mornings. I still had my summer afternoons and evenings to hang out with my friends and enjoy life. So during that time, I didn't miss out on much because my friends would be sleeping in while I was at work. But the night job at the burger van was quite hard.

Speaker F

I worked at high school and was used to having my own money, while all my friends got pocket money. So without a job, I'd miss out on the cinema, ice skating, fast food, bowling, and so on. But because I had to go to work, I missed out on loads anyway. Looking back, all the jobs I did in school paid very little. So, in an ideal world, teens should only do some jobs for experience, and their parents should give them pocket money. Financial support is part of their responsibility as parents.

Sara: Hi, Jack! I didn't expect to see you here today.

Nick: Hello, Mary! A pleasant surprise, isn't it? How are you doing?

Sara: All in all — fine, I guess. I'm glad I ran into you. This is my first time attending such an event. Would you keep me company?

Nick: Absolutely! Let's take a seat. So, why volunteering?

Sara: Well, my mom volunteered when she was at school. She had to communicate with so many people that it helped her to overcome her shyness. It seems that I have a similar issue. Mom calls it 'an awkward self-consciousness of adolescence.' So, here I am — following in my mom's footsteps. What about you?

Nick: Oh, I enjoy interacting with others, and a bunch of regular meetings is part and parcel of volunteering. It allowed me to make many friends from other schools last year.

Sara: It seems like volunteering brings people together. Do you know the projects our school participates in?

Nick: Didn't you read the brochure before coming here? It's all there.

Sara: Nope, I didn't have time.

Nick: Well, there are roles within the local community where you work mainly with people from our area, and support them with some tasks in their daily lives. These are based mostly in hospitals, health centres, and libraries.

Sara: I don't think those ones are for me. I'm not into health or working with the elderly.

Nick: Then probably you can make a difference at our school — helping primary school students.

Sara: What does it include?

Nick: You can become their reading partner and help them turn into proficient readers. Or, if you are of the artistic mind — which you are, as I know — you can tutor them in drama or give free art lessons.

Sara: Should I have good grades?

Nick: I'm not sure, but I would say that's taken for granted. You may ask Ms Rodriguez. I'm sure she knows the answer.

Sara: I see... Is there anything that can take me outside our town?

Nick: I'm not sure about this year, but two years ago they offered a few places at a rainforest conservation program in Costa Rica.

Sara: Wow, that sounds like just what I need — living in the heart of the jungle, meeting jaguars, riding sea turtles...

Nick: Hey, daydreamer, you should stop right here unless your second language is Spanish. It was a must, if I'm not mistaken.

Sara: I've been studying French for some time, but I can take up Spanish classes as well. Oh, look, the meeting is about to start.

Nick: Yeah, let's listen.

Presenter: Hello, everybody! My name is Sandy Brior. Welcome to our regular program about arts and literature. We came back on Monday, after our usual break for weekends, to talk about what should be done if you wish to be an orchestra conductor. On Tuesday, we discussed the release of the Dolly the Beast book. Thursday and Friday will be devoted to museums and art galleries, but today, Wednesday, March 19th, we'll dive into theatre with our expert, Geoffrey Caedmon. Hello, Geoffrey.

Geoffrey Caedmon: Hi, Sandy. I'm pleased to be here today.

Presenter: The pleasure is mine, Geoffrey. I should admit that Geoffrey is neither a film director, nor an actor. You might wonder then what he is doing in the studio today. Well, let's ask Geoffrey. So, Geoffrey, who are you?

Geoffrey Caedmon: You're right, I'm none of those, even though I used to play on stage at school. I work for the University doing research on various issues connected with education and arts.

Presenter: While preparing for the interview, I found out that schools nowadays are reducing their arts budgets and cancelling trips to theatres. Does this have a positive or negative influence on students?

Geoffrey Caedmon: Sandy, before going into details, I wanted to remind those of our listeners who didn't have a chance to go to the theatre with their school class, that it used to be a traditional school practice some 10 years ago. Not only was it a chance to take a break from school and have some fun, but it also had many additional educational benefits. So, I'd say that this is indeed a step in the wrong direction, as investing time into the arts has demonstrated its importance in developing well-rounded learners.

Presenter: So, what are the benefits of taking students to the theatre?

Geoffrey Caedmon: Research suggests that it improves students' knowledge of literature, increases tolerance and empathy, and develops students' emotional intelligence. Theatre acts as a window to a broader world by showing them different perspectives and experiences.

Presenter: But isn't watching a movie the same?

Geoffrey Caedmon: It may be easier and more cost effective to have students watch the movie version of a play — however it does not have the same effects. It turned out that reading and watching movies of Romeo and Juliette by Shakespeare, and Woe from Wit by Griboedov, did not trigger the same increase in knowledge experienced by students who attended live performances of the same plays. Of those who saw the live play, 79% could identify which characters were Romeo's friends, compared to only 38% of those students who watched the movie. As for Woe from Wit, 83% of students who watched the play at the theatre could easily justify the actions of both Chatsky and Sophia, compared to 65% who read the book.

Presenter: Why is that so?

Geoffrey Caedmon: The way we respond to people performing a story on stage is different from how we react to seeing the same performance on a screen. This could be because being present in person can lead to stronger emotional connections. That is why watching movies does not have the same impact on our emotional intelligence as live theatre.

Presenter: Am I right in assuming that arts education should become part and parcel of school curricula?

Geoffrey Caedmon: Arts education is essential for developing creative thinking skills. Students who are involved in the arts tend to explore all possible solutions to come up with creative ideas. Arts education helps them develop into autonomous and resourceful learners by encouraging them to think outside the box. This, in the long run, impacts every subject students are involved in. So, answering your question, yes, integrating arts education is essential and should once again be given a higher priority.

Presenter: Thank you, Geoffrey, for your inspirational answers. I hope more students will get a chance to visit theatres with their schools, and learn to see beyond their own horizons.

Now we are ready to start.

Speaker A

I was home-schooled in the 7th and 8th grades. The biggest pro was absolutely that the amount of time I was in "school" was around 4-5 hours a day. Both of my parents worked, so they'd leave me assignments. I was pretty much entirely self-taught based on the assignments. The downside was being alone a lot. I was alone all day until my sisters came home from school, and I only had a couple of friends in my age group that I might see on weekends.

Speaker B

I was home-schooled from the 2nd grade through high school. I enjoyed it, and I don't think I would have done as well in a public-school setting. We had a group of home-schooled families, and one day a week we would all get together and the parents would share the things they knew in different "classes." We would also all go on "field trips" to science centres, and sometimes farms, to learn about where the things we use every day come from.

Speaker C

I had many friends from home-schooled families, and friends who went to public schools, so I don't feel like I missed out on any socialisation. I'm now 27 and in graduate school for counselling. I don't think I would be where I am now if I were not home-schooled. I think having that option is a really good idea if you're going to do it, as it gives your kid some control over their education. And I believe that is what home-schooling is about at its core.

Speaker D

Some people think that home-schooling is doing nothing. But, in fact, home-schooling is a lot of work. Yet, most of that work is on your parents' shoulders. Another popular misconception is that only parents who are professional teachers can teach their kids at home. Well, you don't have to be a certified teacher. By the time your kids reach subjects that you don't have a Master's in (which is high-school age), they can teach themselves just fine — using their textbooks.

Speaker E

Both my brother and I were home-schooled for a while, but not at the same time. I think it worked really well for him, but it was awful for me. Why? Because the entire reason I was pulled out of school was because I got a B+ in 7th-grade algebra. I was pretty bitter about leaving school, since I had finally made friends and suddenly, I had no one again. When I went back to public school for high school, I was extremely awkward and — surprise! — no better at maths.

Speaker F

You need to have an active home-schooling community in your area. If you live somewhere with no resources — no other families, support, or groups to take your kids to for socialisation — then you're going to have a much harder time. I don't say it's impossible, but it's definitely not ideal and it's going to take even more work to be successful. And some parent-kid combos just aren't successful because of conflicts or a specific teaching style — which can have negative effects.

Emile: Samantha, are you home?

Samantha: Yeah, I'm here. Come in.

Emile: Hi! It wasn't easy to find your place.

Samantha: Is it your first visit? I thought you were here a couple of times.

Emile: Yeah, I planned to, but no. I like it, by the way.

Samantha: Funny, I don't. I'm so fed up with it. Have you noticed how dark it is in here? No sunlight at all. And it's always noisy — so noisy that I do not dare to open the windows.

Emile: I can help you find a better place. There are plenty of apartments available in the city. Do you have a particular area in mind where you want to live?

Samantha: I would change the district itself, but I would like some place quieter — and closer to the underground.

Emile: Hmm. Do you know the park next to the Uni? On the other side of it, there are a few new blocks of flats. They are a bit far from the library, but pretty close to the pool.

Samantha: Sounds good.

Emile: Do you own this place? Do you plan to sell it first?

Samantha: I rent it. And the landlord has just raised the monthly rent. It's over 15 000 a month, and I'd like to stay within the 10 000 range.

Emile: Well, if you are looking for something similar to this one — a two-bedroom apartment with a living room and a balcony — I doubt it's possible.

Samantha: A one-bedroom apartment with a living room would be enough. A balcony would be a cherry on the cake.

Emile: That should not be difficult to find.

Samantha: I'm also hoping to find an apartment that has a gym or fitness centre in the building. I don't want to have to pay for a separate gym membership.

Emile: That's a great idea. I heard those buildings next to the park have a fitness center, but we'll have to check. Have you thought about any other amenities you'd like to have?

Samantha: Well, I do a lot of cooking, so having a kitchen with modern appliances is important to me. And I love having a washer and dryer in the unit, so I don't have to go to a laundromat.

Emile: Those are both important things to consider. We can make sure to include those features in the search. And what about parking? Do you need a designated spot?

Samantha: I don't have a car.

Emile: So that's one less thing to worry about! Do you want a doorman or a secure entry system?

Samantha: Sure. Safety is a top priority for me.

Emile: Noted. We'll look for buildings with those features as well. Finally, when are you moving out?

Samantha: I'd say within the next month, if possible.

Emile: I'll take my laptop, and we'll see what's on the market for you.

Presenter: Hello, everyone! You're listening to Youth Community Radio. It was overcast yesterday during the day and showering at night, yet right now there isn't a cloud in the sky. It's 5 o'clock, the sun is still rising, and I have a steaming mug of coffee right in front of me. We are waiting to be joined by Pepper York, an upcoming psychologist, who's been helping kids from 13 to 19 in the capital, but is now with us. Welcome, Pepper!

Pepper York: Hi, Jack. Thank you for having me today. It's great to be back in my home town. It's been a while.

Presenter: It's great to finally have you on Youth Community Radio. We receive many comments from our listeners — both in our social nets, by post, by phone, you name it — mentioning their struggles to find what they are meant to be. Simon, an 18-year-old boy, posted a comment to our feed saying that he was very passionate about philosophy and social sciences, but he was in love with art for as long as he could remember.

Pepper York: Well, I could assume that — like many others — he is approaching a turn in the road, and is uncertain about everything that comes next. This is a common place to be at eighteen. Am I right in saying that he believes that he doesn't know whether to pursue an artistic career, or one in cognitive science?

Presenter: Yes, he feels pressured to pick the right thing to study at the university, and wonders how necessary university is in order to succeed as a visual artist.

Pepper York: First of all, this is what I'd like to say to him: 'Simon, you're too young to give up on the relatively practical and doable dream of pursuing art. But what you should really think about is that the hardest thing about being an artist is that there isn't really a set way of doing it. So if you are really into it, you should prepare yourself to deal with uncertainties all along the way, and not just at the very beginning.'

Presenter: How so?

Pepper York: If it was a one-to-one session, I'd make him think about such questions as: What kind of art should he make? How will he make money? Who will his art be for? How will he structure his days? What will his community be? What steps will he take toward his goals? And many others.

Presenter: Will they help?

Pepper York: Well, these questions are not easy to answer, and none of the answers will remain reliable for very long. But they will provide insight into the nature of existence. People don't build their lives in one day. The process is endless, constant, and often with no help from others.

Presenter: Could you please elaborate more on that?

Pepper York: There are lots of ways to make it as an artist, and really no definite line between making it and not making it. You can make art your career by showing it in galleries and selling your work, or you can be a professor. You can work as a graphic designer or tattoo artist. You can make money by winning grants. You can have a day job to pay the bills, and also create your art. For some of the professions I mentioned, like a professor or an artist showing in galleries, it's helpful to have a master's degree.

Presenter: Then maybe that's a good reason to study art in college? Did that help you to become who you are?

Pepper York: I have complicated feelings about college. I wasn't particularly happy there. And besides the few classes which made it all worth it, I don't know if I learned much. But I'm glad I went. College can give you a bunch of things, besides giving you access to certain jobs and advanced degrees down the road. It gives you time to decide what you want, and access to people who can offer useful advice.

Presenter: Do you think making a life as an artist is easy?

Pepper York: I wouldn't say so, but it's not necessarily harder than other ways of life.

Presenter: What would you suggest that Simon should do?

Pepper York: Simon, work hard, look for people who can help guide you, and do not be afraid to ask dumb questions. As time passes, you'll get better at sifting out the right answers from the wrong ones. And, by all means, focus also on philosophy, social science, and other stuff that interests you. Anyone who tells you that artists don't have other interests or do other things knows only bad artists.

Speaker A

Recycling — is it worth it to you? Not unless you really want it. Is it worth it for the environment? Yes — less stuff in landfills, more stuff reused, and fewer new materials have to be sourced. Is it worth it energy-wise? Not really. You save very little energy converting recyclable materials back into their raw forms and creating new products. Some may even be quite polluting with the chemicals used, like in paper recycling. So, is it worth recycling? Environmentally, yes. Financially, no.

Speaker B

Cardboard, glass and metal are definitely worth recycling. Plastic — not so much. Most places no longer have anywhere to send plastic to recycle it. There is some domestic recycling capacity for it, but not nearly as much as the supply. I personally just throw away plastic, since my trash service stopped accepting it for recycling. But I also try to buy products with less plastic as much as I can. Hopefully, food manufacturers will soon get more on board with alternatives to plastic.

Speaker C

There is a question whether recycling does good for cities. It depends. Some cities have to ship out the recycling to be processed and changed into a workable material, since they don't have recycling plants close to them. Some things just don't make any money because no one wants them — like plastics. Metals are probably the only real things of any worth. So cities have to invest money into recycling, and that is why there are not very many programs available.

Speaker D

For the most part, modern-day recycling is done so you can feel good about taking an action. Single-use plastic bags, like the ones at the grocery, weren't recyclable before. In fact, they tend to clog up the sorting machines. Many of the plastic bags even say "don't recycle, return to store" on them. Glass is a hazard to pick up because it is very likely to break. And once it's broken, it's pretty much trash. We need to remember the first two words of the logo: Reduce, Reuse, then Recycle.

Speaker E

Many think recycling is a waste of time and effort, but to me it's important to sort and recycle whatever is possible. It's just a matter of what you deem important in your world.

Have a separate bin for recyclables next to your trash can, and you won't need to pick through the dirty trash. It's much easier if you sort it right away, instead of throwing everything away and sorting it afterward. I want to be better and make our world a cleaner place. It's totally my decision.

Speaker F

If you care about not having all your trash just going into a big hole in the ground to be someone else's problem, maybe you can get a community recycling carpool going, or collect bottles and cans with a deposit value for a local cause. My local transfer station has a shed set up by a landscape artist who lives in town. He plants and maintains local roadside flower beds through volunteer efforts, and by using the money he collects from deposits on bottles and cans people leave in the shed.

Rose: Hey, Jack! How are you today?

Jack: Hi, Rosa! A bit overwhelmed, as we had four classes of astronomy today instead of the usual two.

Rose: How so?

Jack: We usually have two classes on Mondays and Wednesdays, but our teacher went to a conference on Monday and rescheduled all the classes for today.

Rose: Lucky you. We don't have astronomy yet — only physics and maths. But I love stars! Have you ever looked at the stars and wondered about the universe?

Jack: Yeah, all the time. It's amazing how vast and mysterious it is. Did you know that the sun is actually a star?

Rose: Are you kidding? Of course I know that. It's the closest star to Earth, and is only 93 million miles away from us.

Jack: You are right! And did you know that the universe is still expanding today?

Rose: Yeah, and scientists believe that there are billions of galaxies out there.

Jack: That's crazy, isn't it? And have you heard of the Big Bang theory?

Rose: I have, but I don't remember any facts. Can you remind me?

Jack: Sure. It's the idea that the universe started from a massive explosion about 13.8 billion years ago. And today at school we talked about black holes. These are regions in space where the gravitational pull is so strong that nothing can escape from them, not even light.

Rose: Whoa, that's crazy! Have you studied stars today as well? By the way, what do you call a group of stars that forms a shape in the sky and has a name?

Jack: Oh, we call them constellations. No, we haven't studied constellations today, but my dad used to take me to the mountains and we would spend nights looking at them. He was the one who taught me about them. There's Orion, the Big Dipper, the Little Dipper, and many others. Can you find any of them in the sky?

Jack: Yeah, and it's part of the constellation Ursa Major, which means 'Big Bear' in Latin.

Rose: Cool! Have you ever seen a shooting star?

Jack: I haven't, but my brother has. He says it's amazing. But it's not really a star. It's actually a meteoroid that enters Earth's atmosphere and burns up, creating a bright streak of light.

Rose: That's so cool! I wish we could see one. Do you think there's life on other planets?

Jack: It's possible. Scientists are always searching for signs of life on other planets or moons in our solar system.

Rose: That would be amazing if we found life out there. I wonder what they would look like.

Jack: Yeah, it's hard to say. But it's exciting to think about the possibilities.

Rose: Definitely! I'd love to learn more about astronomy. It's so fascinating.

Now we are ready to start.

Presenter: Hello, hello, my dear listeners! I know that many of you who are now about forty or fifty wished to become actors back when you were kids. And some of you who are in your twenties would still like to play on stage one day. And if you are around ten, well, the world is your oyster and your parents are the ones who can help you right now. So we are here today to do our part, aren't we, Parker?

Parker O'Harra: Indeed, we are, Mary.

Presenter: Parker O'Harra, is a founder of a theatre company, a producer, a casting director seeking a cast for his new show, and a friend of mine. Parker, I can't even express how delighted I am to see you here today, the 18th of August — the 5th anniversary of our program.

Parker O'Harra: Mary, the pleasure is mine. Remember when we were playing in the sandbox some thirty years ago, and I told you that we'd be famous one day and you didn't believe me? Well, here we are (laughs).

Presenter: Yes, here we are! But let's quit reminiscing and focus on the issue at hand. Tell me, Parker, how do you determine who is the right fit for your show?

Parker O'Harra: First of all, what's really important to me as a show runner is authenticity. It's the key. We want to weed out anyone whose only goal is to become famous. If someone comes on the show to get a check on a social net, or to play games, this is not our person. We take it very seriously, and we want participants who have layers and are willing to grow. That's the ultimate goal of the show.

Presenter: So, just that? No knowledge, no skills?

Parker O’Harra: Both are important, but authenticity is the key. Right now, when the theatre community is crazy about musicals, the show features teens and kids making their first steps into the wonderful world of musical theatre. And yes, answering your questions, our participants should know about the most popular musicals and should be able to sing and play and do both things really well.

Presenter: What should participants or their parents do to make their kids ready for auditions?

Parker O’Harra: Well, first they should check our website for the list of audition songs that are specific to the show. We are looking for participants of various vocal ranges, so, there is no need to learn songs outside your vocal range. If you don’t know your vocal range, it’s time to find out what it is. Knowing and understanding it is an important part of moving forward in your musical journey. And it’s very simple! All you need is a keyboard or a virtual piano, a few spare minutes, and no one around — so that you will have no self-consciousness when you are belting out the notes.

Presenter: Is that also true for younger kids who haven’t reached their vocal maturity yet?

Parker O’Harra: Oh, trebles! This is what we call the voice type that teens often fall into before their voice transforms into their adult voice. Treble is similar to the adult mezzo-soprano. So, if you are a teenager who has overgrown child-friendly pieces, check out the adult mezzo-soprano repertoire. And please, don’t hold onto an idea like, ‘I know, I’m definitely a soprano,’ which could cause you to sing songs that are absolutely wrong for you. You could have been one when you were five, but your voice changes and so does your repertoire. So I’d suggest you read audition details carefully, as they might specify the type of song we would like to hear. It might be a ballad, or something up-tempo, for example.

Presenter: Do you choose participants only through auditions, or is there a chance to skip the queue?

Parker O’Harra: The majority of our participants come through official auditions, yet we are ready to go the extra mile and turn over every rock to find every talent that lies below all those places you wouldn’t ordinarily look. We are out looking for new faces constantly. We find some of them by going to places where people act and sing their hearts out and get coins tossed at them. With kids, we attend school plays and drama-class rehearsals, we stop by playgrounds and tune in when hearing a mom and a daughter singing cheerfully while shopping.

Presenter: What would you advise those auditioning for your show?

Parker O’Harra: If you’re trying to guess what we want, it’s game over. Be a surprise!

Speaker A

My learning style and my academic interests make exams really good for me personally. I enjoy taking them, and have done well for a variety of reasons. But they're not for everyone, just like major studies in general aren't for everyone. Plus, exams themselves aren't bad. It's the pressure they put on you to study and do well because they'll contribute to your final grade. And that pressure contributes to the negative connotations associated with exams.

Speaker B

Obviously, exams can be very stressful, especially if most of your grade depends on a single test. And I think that is where exams have the most negative effect. Most classes set up in that manner will have the question "Will this be on the test?" asked a lot. Everything for which the answer is "no" will be immediately forgotten, and the rest will be memorised, because it will be on the test. For sure, that doesn't encourage learning the material, but simply rote memorisation of facts.

Speaker C

If you have exams that encourage learning the application of what is taught to problems at hand, there will probably be better understanding and retention of the material. This works better with a larger number of smaller tests to check a student's skills, instead of 2 exams of terror. In this manner, the exams provide a benefit, as the teacher finds out what concepts need to be taught better, and students are really forced to spend time understanding the material before the test.

Speaker D

Those who are against exams say that exams only require a lot of memorising. First of all, memory is extremely useful for a lot of applications, and in fields such as medicine the ability to remember lots of information is key. Secondly, you do have to apply your knowledge in a lot of exams — it's not just brain dumping. For example, in Math, to truly be able to solve the trickier questions you have to actually understand the mathematics behind them in the first place.

Speaker E

The main reason that I think exams are better than, say, a teacher just saying how good they think you are is bias. In my school, I know many kids who teachers would praise and tell them how gifted they are. But they weren't really that smart. Exams are the same for everyone who takes them. In some exams, like English, you're going to have to write something, and exams allow you to show what you know. In subjects like Math, exams help avoid a lot of the bias that teachers have for certain students.

Speaker F

Many think that exams are too stressful for kids at a younger age. I do agree with this to an extent, as I think that preparing for exams is stressful, however, lots of things in life are stressful. Preparing for a job interview? That's stressful. Exams teach you how to build a schedule to prepare yourself correctly for difficult situations, which is useful. Yet, I don't believe kids below the age of 12 should be taking many exams, as I think it is a little too stressful for them.

Sean: Hi, Jinny! Have you heard the news?

Jinny: You've won the first prize in a competition?

Sean: Not yet. But I'm going to and you'll help me.

Jinny: Wow. You're kidding.

Sean: I'm not! I've found information on the Internet about a competition for young learners, which is open to all pupils who are innovative and creative. We've already been studying Greek for 4 years. I think that it's such a nice opportunity to show everyone how interesting the language and the culture of Greece is.

Jinny: I knew that you love Greek, but I didn't know that you're that crazy about it.

Sean: I am. You know that The Greek Legends is my favourite book. It is always near my bed, and I can re-read particular parts whenever I want. Anyway, will you help me?

Jinny: First of all, tell me what should we do?

Sean: We need to choose a story. Actually, I've already chosen one: it's a story about Athena, the birth of Athena, to be exact. Then, we should write the script, as it's a theatrical competition...

Jinny: Oh, and afterwards, probably, we'll need people ready to spend all their free time sewing costumes, memorizing lines, and rehearsing without a break for lunch.

Sean: It's not that bad...

Jinny: Definitely, not. It's worse. We don't know how to write scripts, we don't have many friends who speak Greek and who are interested in acting.

Sean: Well. As for the script, we can do a search on Internet and find some books or articles of famous Hollywood scriptwriters. They might be very helpful. I've already seen one. Then, you can draw a "Wanted" poster and put it at the board near the drama classroom. Believe me, in two days we'll have an eager and enthusiastic team.

Jinny: Ok. What will be next? Do we need to perform our play live in front of the audience or can we film it?

Sean: In the spring, we should submit the DVD to the judges. So, we have about 5 months to rehearse, perform, film and crop and edit, and...

Jinny: Ok, sounds as if you have a plan. And the deadline is reasonable. Let's try and see what happens. Who knows, maybe we will triumph in this international competition.

Now we are ready to start.

Presenter: Broadcasting live around the globe on Radio Sundae is David Silverspoon. Hope, you started your weekend right by waking up to the breakfast show with my colleagues, Sarah and Jessica. Your day just got a whole lot better, and you are now ready to travel around the world with our guest, Jemima Foxcraft. Hi, Jemima! How are you today?

Jemima Foxcraft: Hello, David. I'm fine, thank you. Much better than yesterday. The weather was terrible, wasn't it?

Presenter: It was raining hailstones as big as eggs. But I wouldn't expect anything different from Friday the 13th.

Jemima Foxcraft: Neither would I (laughing).

Presenter: So, Jemima, where will you take us today?

Jemima Foxcraft: I want to take you on a tour around small, picturesque towns full of bookshops and book-related industries. So, we are off for book towns!

Presenter: And what makes a town a book town?

Jemima Foxcraft: Well, having one book store or even two in a town doesn't turn it into a book town. You should have a real concentration of them, where people keen on reading might spend hours, or even days, browsing. While many cities have numerous book shops, book towns have them all in a small area, in order to create a critical mass. They usually begin with a couple of second-hand book stores and later grow to offer new books, too.

Presenter: Is that a recent movement?

Jemima Foxcraft: It depends on your age. They've been out and about for around half a century. Book towns have been springing up all over the globe since the 1970s. There are now dozens of them — from Australia and Finland, to India and South Africa. I haven't been able to locate any in Russia or Argentina yet.

Presenter: How did it all start? What's the rationale behind turning a town into a book town?

Jemima Foxcraft: As it turns out, it all started with an idea. Richard Booth wanted to regenerate Hay, his home town in New South Wales, in Australia. Things used to be economically slim, and the population was decreasing as younger people moved away into cities. So he strived to provide employment, keep people in Hay, and increase the influx of tourists.

Presenter: Why not do it in metropolises?

Jemima Foxcraft: It is easier to do where rents are low — somewhere away from large cities. Moreover, after we've gone through everyone getting excited about e-books and online reading, having something practical and in your hand is something that people are happy to travel for. They're starting to come back to the idea of things that are handmade, things that are created in a traditional way, things you can hold and smell and touch. I think in locations that are particularly picturesque, those things come together, and people feel they are getting a proper physical experience.

Presenter: It seems to me that there is a balance to keep between the charming nature of a book town, and this almost money-oriented logic.

Jemima Foxcraft: Absolutely. People involved in book selling in small towns must be quite business-minded and hard-headed about it, otherwise it won't work. But I don't think anybody's going to make billions out of selling second-hand books, so it's got to be people who are doing it for the love of it. And it's not only about bookselling. Book towns become creative hubs, where there's plenty to do and see — and the books are just the jumping-off point.

Presenter: So, where should I start if I am to visit one of them?

Jemima Foxcraft: If you have the means, or you leave in the Southern Hemisphere, go to Hay. Simply because that's the first book town ever. They have a wide range of bookshops, and there's a new book museum opening later this year. Another one would be Paju Book City in South Korea. Its major hallmark is that people don't live there, unlike in other book towns. They come in to work there, and everything there is book-related. My third choice would be Wigtown, in Scotland. It's a vivid example of a place that was regenerated by book selling. Some twenty years ago it was having a hard time — industries were closing and people were moving out. And they've absolutely turned it around — going from nothing, to doing a big literary festival and spin-offs. And the setting is amazing.

Speaker A

Are turtles good pets to have? Turtles are beautiful and fascinating creatures, but it's always a good idea to conduct research before buying one. There are many kinds of turtles and tortoises, and each has different characteristics. Some of them have very specific needs. With a pet turtle, be prepared for a long-term commitment. Many can live as long as fifty years, or even longer! As you can tell, caring for one of these creatures isn't as simple as one might think.

Speaker B

When choosing your pet, consider what kind of living environment they'll need. It's better to think long-term from the beginning. Most small or baby pets will be fine in a tank or a basket, but as an adult, they might need a bigger home. Plan ahead for a larger living space for your pet. Make sure your pet's home has what they need. A tortoise, for example, can be happy in a small yard with a pond. A red-eared slider may require a tank or tub with lots of water.

Speaker C

What animal is the best first pet? Well, turtles can indeed be a good first pet. Actually, they are quiet, easy-going, require little interaction, and can provide years of companionship. Are turtles fun pets? You may need to redefine your definition of "fun". Turtles are normally loners. They prefer to be admired and spoken to, but not physically handled. Turtles are usually not very social. They recognize humans as mostly providers of food, but they can be fun.

Speaker D

Dogs and cats have been eating pet food for years, but a growing trend has items such as rice, carrots and even salmon ending up in their bowls. For years, we've been told it's safer to give our pets store-bought pet food, but a lot of people think otherwise. Folks typically have the best of intentions when they add the food from their table to pets' menus. But is it more beneficial or harmful in the long run? I feel the risk of feeding pets the food they shouldn't eat is too high.

Speaker E

Exotic animals are definitely becoming more popular as pets these days. They are really cool to have. Some of them are very beautiful and they can be easily purchased over the Internet. But there is no such thing as an easy pet. And you'd better not take a wild animal as a pet. Chances are they won't do well in captivity. Look into adopting an animal from a local centre or society before buying one. And if you do buy, make absolutely sure it's been born in captivity.

Speaker F

Before commercial pet food entered the market, many dogs and cats lived on the scraps left over from human's meals. Today, more and more pet owners give the food they eat themselves to their pets so they know exactly what goes into their diets. This is certainly an acceptable way to feed your pet. If you want to start feeding your pet a healthy diet of foods already in your fridge or pantry, make a gradual transition from commercial pet food.

Edward: Mom? Dad? Sheryl? Anybody home?

Sheryl: Ed? Are you back from school?

Edward: Yes. Sheryl, how are you? Feeling better?

Sheryl: I've still got a runny nose and keep on coughing, but I've stopped running a temperature. I wonder if you would like to join me for lunch?

Edward: With pleasure. I also have a project to discuss.

Sheryl: What's that?

Edward: We're to organize a book swap.

Sheryl: What?

Edward: The idea is that anyone from our school can show up, bring spare books and magazines, and help themselves to what others have brought in. Ms. Green says it's free and easy and saves everyone a lot of money they normally splash out. She also wants everyone to buzz about their new finds for weeks, and, definitely, encourage our lot to read more.

Sheryl: Sounds reasonable. Ed, we have piles of books on our shelves that might never get read or those we've leafed through and didn't like.

Edward: True.

Sheryl: Though it might be interesting to rummage through other people's books, I don't think there'd be a lot of eager people to do that.

Edward: When you come to think of it, everybody loves bread and circuses. So, Sheryl, to make them come we should think of entertainment. To create a more social atmosphere, we may offer refreshments. We may also organize a lottery as part entertainment and part fundraiser to cover the costs of drinks.

Sheryl: Ed, that's a lovely idea. Cakes, warm drinks, popcorn and some other easily served nibbles will make the event more fun. We may even ask people to help out in that way. They may bring something with them too.

Edward: Ok! We've got the atmosphere covered, but, all things considered, it can be awkward and inefficient for students to have to swap books with each other directly. Any ideas here?

Sheryl: Well, we may put out bins labelled with 'Classics', 'Fantasy', 'Memoirs', 'Detectives', and even 'Random' and ask people to organize the books they've brought into the bins provided. And as they move around, they are free to browse what's already there and take what they are interested in. By the way, who is going to get the word out that we're having the event?

Edward: Hmm, it's the trickiest part. We may create a low-ink poster that we can easily print at home on a coloured paper. Then we'll share it on notice boards at school. We may also ask our peers to spread the word during their extracurricular activities.

Sheryl: And! There're social media! We may create a social net 'event' and then invite our friends. Some might even blog about the event.

Edward: Oh! It's bound to be a success! Thank you, Sheryl!

Sheryl: My pleasure!

Now we are ready to start.

Presenter: Hello, everybody! My name is Mary Sailor and welcome to our regular program about music. Last week we had a French horn player, who shared with us the challenges of his profession. Two weeks before, three pianists advised you to spend no less than one hour a day practising if you wish to become successful. Today we'll discuss with our expert, Simon Banks, what to do if you aspire to become a conductor. Hello, Simon.

Simon Banks: Hi, Mary and hello to everyone. I'm pleased to be here today.

Presenter: Simon, I'm sure there are certain steps that must be taken to achieve such an ambitious goal as becoming an orchestra conductor. Could you please give us more details on that?

Simon Banks: Absolutely! Many music students dream of leading a group of highly trained musicians using their own unique interpretations. However, there are a number of skills required for becoming a professional conductor. First and foremost, to be able to inspire the best musicians, you need the ability to communicate with players on their own level. You should speak and understand their language. And I don't mean English or French. What I want to say is that if you don't know what it means to play an instrument well, you are not in a position to demand the same thing from an orchestra. Regardless of the instrument you choose, you must become extremely proficient at playing it.

Presenter: So, if you don't play any musical instrument or don't play it well, the career of a conductor is not for you?

Simon Banks: Exactly! Being a conductor is about presenting music in a way that you interpret it. Essentially, your orchestra is your instrument. Like musicians who are able to channel their feelings into their playing, an aspiring conductor needs to love music so much that they can effectively communicate their ideas to the group. So, you must love music more than you love yourself in a way.

Presenter: That's amazing! I've never thought of it that way. Are there any other aspects involved in a conducting career?

Simon Banks: Because you will be working with people, you need to know how to effectively communicate with them and inspire them at the same time. You should know how to understand different personalities in order to create positive interaction.

Presenter: So, you need to be a musician and a psychologist at the same time.

Simon Banks: And a leader, and a mother. Because you should also learn how to inspire your performers and bring out the best in each one without starting unnecessary quarrels and arguments. You should also be a bit of a linguist.

Presenter: A linguist?

Simon Banks: Yes. A strong grasp of music language is important. And for that a conductor should be familiar with various languages such as Italian, German, and French so that they can share their interpretation of a musical piece with orchestra players from different countries.

Presenter: Do you need to graduate from University or College to become a conductor?

Simon Banks: I'd love to say that no education is needed if you are talented, but that's just not true. Many professional positions require a master's at the minimum, but some minor positions need a bachelor's degree in arts. And while education is essential, like most jobs, experience also ranks very high as a marketable feature. Fortunately, you don't have to wait for college internships, you can get experience on your own if you know where to look.

Presenter: That's amazing! Will you share some productive ideas with our audience?

Simon Banks: Actually, they are relatively simple. First, go to rehearsals. You'll see what makes performance and observe how conductors make it happen. Second, listen to classical music. As much as possible, explore all types of music. Simply familiarizing yourself with classical pieces will help you develop your own ideas about how the music should be performed. And, silly as it may seem, pretend to conduct an orchestra using CDs or videos. If you work in front of a mirror, you will see what you need to correct or improve.

Presenter: Thank you very much, Simon.

Speaker A

From cats and dogs to bunnies and iguanas, many of us count one or more of these animals among our very best friends. They enrich our lives and complete our families — but even the creatures we don't share our homes with deserve our respect and care. Providing financial support to organizations that work to save animals' lives and improve their living conditions is a great way to ensure our furry and feathered friends get necessary care.

Speaker B

If you're interested in supporting the animals you can't welcome into your home, donating to an animal rescue charity is a great way to give back. But it's important to remember that not all charities are as trustworthy as others — and it's vital to know your donations are being used in the best possible way. That's why you'd better monitor your local community to find the best charities. Surely, there're some local reputable charities for animals to get you started.

Speaker C

With so many organizations out there to choose from, how do you find the best animal rescue charity to support? First, you should start by narrowing down your goals. Then, keep in mind that you can't help every animal on Earth. While many of us wish we could save every animal that needs our help, most charity organizations focus on certain types of animals or different geographic areas to accomplish the most with the limited resources they have available.

Speaker D

I know there're many types of animal rescue nonprofit organizations to satisfy all needs. If you're a fan of wildlife, maybe endangered animal charities appeal to you. If you prefer to focus on dogs, cats and other furry pals close to home, plenty of local animal charities would love your help. These days, there're even animal welfare charities dedicated to helping specific breeds of dogs and cats. Surely, all types of charities would welcome your donation.

Speaker E

I can name many reasons why your company should make charitable donations. Donating to charities can help change your company's image and work culture. It can also have a dramatic impact on others. Charitable donations help better your community, and the public will notice if a company is making a real effort to improve its surroundings. Your company's donations can help improve schools or parks, giving children safe places to learn and play.

Speaker F

You're a great person with a big heart, but that doesn't mean you're willing and able to contribute to every charitable cause that comes your way. Of course, it's not always easy to decline donation requests, which can be frustrating. If you find yourself in a situation where you feel you can't simply turn down a request — but still have no plans to donate — there're several strategies to consider. All of them centre on being honest, direct and polite.

Katie: Oh, hi! What are you doing here with the laptop?

William: Hi, Katie. Remember my birthday party last week?

Katie: The one that you decided to have a month after the actual date? Yeah, sure. Why?

William: I was talking to David the other day about why he hadn't shown up and I think he was not honest with me. It drives me crazy. So, I decided to search for some tips about how to detect if a person is lying in the future. I've been poring over a range of Internet resources the whole day.

Katie: Any results?

William: Well, it seems that this topic is of high interest to people all over the world. There are articles on deception in general, the reasons people lie, some statistics, and whatnot. There are tons of comments on body language, statement analysis, micro expressions and even forensic psychology.

Katie: Anything handy? Or have you got snowed under all this information?

William: Indeed, it seems too much. Can you help? I know you took a course on lies as part of your university curriculum.

Katie: I did. And I made a mental list of what I should pay attention to while talking to people. Yet, I'm not an expert on lie detection.

William: Do tell me.

Katie: First of all, I reckon that eye direction and lying have nothing in common. You cannot say if a person is being untruthful by noting their eyes moving to your left.

William: Ok. So, no eye tracking.

Katie: Exactly. Second, a guilty person will not necessarily get defensive and turn their head or body away. Think of Nicky, our sister, who typically goes on the offensive and nearly takes your head off if being accused of lying. And in most cases, she is not as innocent as she wants to be.

William: That's what David did. He went ape on me when I asked him why he wasn't there.

Katie: Did he try to change the subject?

William: He didn't, I did. I didn't want to listen to him shouting at me, so abruptly moved to another issue.

Katie: And?

William: And it seemed that he wanted the subject changed. He became more relaxed, started smiling. His whole face got involved and gestures seemed to be more natural.

Katie: So, he was probably untruthful with you. But, even so, does it change anything? He is still your best friend, isn't he?

Katie: Neither do I.

Presenter: Hello, everybody! My name is Jim Fairfax and here with me in the studio is Sally O'Connell. Hi, Sally!

Sally O'Connell: Hi, Jim!

Presenter: Sally, thank you for coming. I know you had a busy morning today and you have an evening flight back home, but it's only noon and we're ready to discuss virtual learning in our regular program 'Tips and Tricks'. So, what is virtual learning?

Sally O'Connell: Virtual learning is a learning experience that is organized through the use of computers and/or the Internet. Unlike a virtual classroom, which is meant to replicate and replace the physical classroom for distance learners, virtual learning supplements in-class experience with digital communication and interaction. For instance, online quizzes or polls. Today, teachers and students across the country are making the transition to distance and virtual learning.

Presenter: Sally, for many students, this is the first experience using video chat and digital conferencing as a tool for learning. Are there specific rules of virtual learning etiquette, or are they similar to those we're used to following in a physical classroom?

Sally O'Connell: They are a little different from the ones we've used to. Actually, I've intended to share a few tips to help students adjust to their new setup, engage fully in virtual class time and troubleshoot any related challenges. They were instrumental for me, so, I hope, they'll come in handy for other learners as well.

Presenter: We are all ears.

Sally O'Connell: First, a quiet environment is the key when you're setting up space for virtual class time. Choose a spot where there will be minimal distractions, ideally away from the flow of family "traffic". It's fabulous if you can set up your device at a desk, table or countertop so that your hands are free to take notes and flip through class materials.

Presenter: By the way, talking about class materials, are there any? Can't they just browse for them during the class?

Sally O'Connell: Absolutely not! Just like ordinary class time, it's better to have your materials ready when a virtual class or lecture begins. Gather any books, notes, printouts and binders that you may need to reference during the session. Make sure you have a pen and paper handy! And don't forget to let your family members know you're about to enter class time. This way, they can avoid distracting you and be mindful of their volume.

Presenter: My kids have French classes with a teacher from France via Zoom. There are five other children in a group and it's ridiculous to hear them argue with parents about chores or shooing their pets away when the teacher is explaining the task.

Sally O'Connell: That's exactly what I wanted to mention next. After you log on make sure to mute yourself! Background noises such as typing, chewing or barking and meowing pets may not sound like much on your side, but those noises can amplify across your teacher's and classmates' speakers. Most audio/mute buttons look like a little microphone. You'll know you're muted when you see an X or slash over the button. And, always double-check: are you really muted?

Presenter: Sally, don't you think it's too easy to get distracted when you're sitting alone in front of a device with no one around to check on you?

Sally O'Connell: It really is. You can stay focused if you use active listening techniques. For instance, to show that you're paying attention to the teacher, nod, smile and react to what you're hearing, just the way you would in the classroom. Use a pen and paper to jot down the main points and ideas of the lesson in bulleted notes. Challenge yourself to learn one new thing from a classmate, ask one question or share one piece of positive feedback. And, please, resist the urge to surf the net!

Sally O'Connell: Don't panic! Technical glitches are bound to happen. Calm down, troubleshoot, and try logging on again!

Speaker A

When the sun comes out, the snow melts, and wildlife returns, many of my friends are eager to kick off a camping season. Whether to escape the stresses of city life or take a pandemic-safe holiday, more families and individuals now are turning to the great outdoors. But it also raises a few pain points, especially for first-time campers or less experienced nature lovers. After all, camping isn't all bonfires and lying in the shade — it requires extensive planning and research.

Speaker B

I think the best part of any camping trip is sitting down to enjoy a hearty meal together. If your camping trip lasts more than a weekend and hunting or trapping animals isn't on the itinerary, I'd recommend non-perishable food options. Oatmeal and granola are excellent sources of fiber and protein. Dehydrated meats and pasta, or beans will also keep fresh without the need for cold storage. For snacking, I often pack up some popcorn, nuts, dried fruit, crackers, or even chocolate.

Speaker C

When I go camping, I always take a compass. For me, it's an essential camping tool. Compasses are both compact and dependable when it comes to navigating the woods, namely because they don't rely on batteries. They're all about know how. The orienteering compass is most commonly used outdoors. The needle always points north and is almost always in red. Magnetic north will allow you to orient yourself and identify the other four cardinal points.

Speaker D

When I go camping, I always put a compass in my pocket, grab a pair of binoculars and take my phone with a field-guide app for identifying plants, birds and other forms of wildlife. Actually, I think learning how to identify what's around you is very useful. And it's never been easier. It can happen there's no Internet around in the wild. But you have the huge database of a field-guide app. So, neither Wi-Fi nor cell service is needed for you. It's really great.

Speaker E

In my opinion, fire is an absolute necessity for staying warm and cooking. Our camping checklist always includes matches, a lighter, kindling and firewood. There're a few types of campfires and methods of building them, but the most common is the cone formation. Of course, it's important to keep in mind that the cone setup will burn through wood quickly. So, the log cabin arrangement may be the best option if you're using the campfire for cooking.

Speaker F

Getting ready for camping, I first think about the weather. It's really important to consider the season, local climate and weather forecast when packing a suitcase. To save space, I tightly roll, rather than fold, each clothing piece and stack it inside my suitcase. I usually have at least two changes of clothes for each day of my trip. Camping trips typically expose travellers to more dirt, sweat and messy foods. It's greatly different from life at home!

Noah: Samantha, over here. Hi!

Samantha: Hey, long time no see...

Noah: Oh, yeah! Shall we sit by the window?

Samantha: Actually, I'd prefer to sit in the corner. That booth looks cosy and I don't like being on display.

Noah: Your wish is my command. I usually sit at the counter, but any place will do. I love this café. They serve amazing coffee and refreshing smoothies. Fancy anything?

Samantha: I'm a fan of milkshakes. Do you remember spending nights over banana-and-chocolate ice-cream?

Noah: Believe me, I do. Then a banana milkshake for you and one Latte for me. I'm a bit sleepy today, so I hope caffeine will do the trick.

Samantha: Hm. I think I'll go with Latte as well. Don't feel like having a cold drink today.

Noah: Sure. Rumor has it that you've finally graduated.

Samantha: What do you mean 'finally'? It didn't take long and I was the best student in my course.

Noah: But it wasn't four years either, was it?

Samantha: No, it wasn't. I did take a couple of internships at the hospital while studying, which added a year and a half to my education. Well, nearly two years, all right. What about you?

Noah: I've done my Bachelor's and I will get my Master's in half a year. What's the most useful thing you got from your studies?

Samantha: I guess, that was a concept that I should be able to maintain the work-life balance. My professors say that these days companies encourage their employees to bring what they call their whole self to work, and that we shouldn't be tempted by that.

Noah: I agree with them. I've had a summer internship with one company. Everything there was about optimizing my personality. The community. The sense that I was not working for a salary but to make the world a better place. I was in love with my work; body, mind, heart and soul. But I soon realised that what they actually wanted is to expand the company's profits.

Samantha: Harsh reality, yeah. You love your work but it doesn't love you back.

Noah: Indeed. And my love to work and my energy are limited. And life is more than work.

Samantha: I couldn't agree more. According to one of my textbooks, work is labour exchanged for salary. It shouldn't turn into an all-encompassing sacrifice of our time and energy.

Noah: My grandma wouldn't agree with you here. She used to say that I should love my work.

Samantha: I don't mean that we should hate our job, but we shouldn't become work-obsessed.

Noah: Yeah. But, we got distracted. Let's order our drinks and maybe some snacks. What do you think?

Samantha: Yeah. Could you please pass me the menu?

Presenter: Good morning to you all! Alice Fraiser and Donald Thatcher are here for you today. As you know, Donald is a well-known writer of young adult fiction and stories for children. His major work, Dolly the Beast, has been successfully screened and caught on at once, hasn't it?

Donald Thatcher: Hi, Alice! Oh, yes! It has. There's now a whole community of fans, who come up with their own prequels, sequels, and side-stories. And I'm here today to say 'thank you' to you guys! Without you, nothing would have been possible!

Presenter: Donald, while preparing for the program, you mentioned that there's a surprise you wanted to share. What is it?

Donald Thatcher: To answer this question, I should go a few months back. I was going to surprise my family and bake a Christmas cake full of raisins, cherries, and sultans...

Presenter: Umm. Sounds delicious.

Donald Thatcher: It does. So, I was in the middle of making dough, when I realised that a perfect baking tray is nowhere to be seen. So, I climbed upstairs, to the attic to find it. Instead, I stumbled upon a lot of amazing things: an old swing set, a collection of my great grandparents' pictures in a leather book, my wife's premiere dresses, a dozen of teddy bears, and a dusty shoebox with a piece of paper attached. It said: "A slimy tree". I got it down and opened it.

Presenter: Was the tray inside?

Donald Thatcher: Even better. There was a manuscript of a children's book.

Presenter: How did it end up there?

Donald Thatcher: That's obvious, actually. When I work on a book, I drift into a habit of drafting its chapters whenever the idea comes to me. So, there is always a gazillion of papers, sticky notes and even tissues from coffee shops with my notes scribbled on them. My wife helps me to organise them. She devised a system of labelled shoe boxes, and puts all the notes she finds into them. This particular box was dedicated to the story about a slimy tree.

Presenter: Didn't you want to publish it?

Donald Thatcher: I charted it out and read during the bed-story-time to my kids. They liked it. I did intend to publish it straight after the release of Dolly the Beast. But when this fantasy series made a hit, I held back. Over time I came to think of The Slimy Tree as just for my family. So, the manuscript went up into the attic, where it remained until this Christmas.

Presenter: What are you going to do with the story now?

Donald Thatcher: I'd like to release it chapter by chapter on my website, with the entire book eventually being uploaded. It'll later be published as a physical book. You don't need to register or pay to get access to the book, nor to live in the UK or USA. The chapters are there for you to read in English.

Presenter: Wow! That's a very generous gesture in our commercialized to the core world.

Donald Thatcher: There's more! The coolest thing is that I'll upload chapters daily alongside my suggestions for what you, my dear readers, might like to draw. But, please, don't restrain yourselves and let your imagination run wild. The best artworks will be included in a published version of the book next year.

Presenter: Will you choose the best works?

Donald Thatcher: I will be able to see them and, maybe, comment on them, but I won't be judging the competition. People from all over the world will have a chance to vote for the artworks online, but my publishers will decide which illustrations work best for their editions. So, here's a chance for you to get creative and to get featured in my new book. Get imagining, and good luck!

Speaker A

As it turns out, a lot of animals are a lot smarter than most humans think. If we had a clear way to communicate with them, it would probably be astonishing to find out what's going on in their cute little minds. There's a long list of really smart animals on Earth. From chimpanzees to whales, ants and even sheep, there's a lot more to the animal kingdom than meets the eye. When studies were conducted, it was found out that most animals are rather intelligent creatures.

Speaker B

I think pigs are some of the smartest animals in the world. Some scientists say they're smarter than chimps. The reason is simple: they've seen pigs play video games more successfully than chimps. It's hard to argue with that logic, right? Their object-location memory is phenomenal. Once they find food in a location, they'll go back to the same area next time, expecting food to be there. Even more impressive is that pigs can find their way home, from a long distance away.

Speaker C

A cat's excellent hunting ability certainly doesn't come from luck. It comes from their supreme sensory abilities and intelligence. Although it's true that cats aren't as trainable as dogs, it doesn't mean they aren't as smart. I've read cats have twice as many neurons in their brains as dogs have. This extensive brain power leads to rational thought and the ability to solve problems and make smart decisions. Plus, cats can recognize if objects change places.

Speaker D

Many people think horses are just good farmworkers, but that's not their only merit. They're sensitive by nature, and they often respond to human emotions in appealing ways. Also, horses have learnt how to communicate with us in a sort of sign language. An experiment showed that they learnt to tell humans whether or not they wanted to wear a rug. When it was sunny, they didn't want one, but when it was cold or wet, they did. Perfectly logical, right?

Speaker E

People often think of sheep as lacking intelligence — some call them downright stupid. That's why people call those who follow someone mindlessly “sheep”. However, we've got sheep all wrong, because they are actually pretty smart. Their memories are outstanding as well as their ability to recognize faces. One study found that sheep could figure out how to get out of a difficult maze, and the ones who did it the fastest waited at the exit to help the others get out too.

Speaker F

Did you ever imagine that bees might be able to tell the difference between a Picasso and a Monet painting? This is thanks to their excellent visual processing skills. Other bee skills include learning and performing tasks to get a reward. I've heard that bees can communicate with each other by dancing, jostling and head-butting. Their group decision-making skills are on point as well. Even crazier, they choose the new hive location together through a vote. Cool, right?

John: Penelope, hi! I was in the middle of an email to my scientific advisor. Anyway, I got here as soon as I read your text message. Has anything happened?

Penelope: Yes and no. It's definitely not a life-and-death situation, yet it does make me miserable.

John: Tell me.

Penelope: I know that you have your own agenda, John, so, to make a long story short, I failed my English history exam, little brother.

John: And how can I be of any help to you? I haven't even started this course yet.

Penelope: Even though you haven't, you know more than I do. You're keen on accents and dialects and for me it's all Greek.

John: Wow, not everything is as black as you paint it if you quote Shakespeare.

Penelope: Whatever. Will you help me or not?

John: Sure, I will.

Penelope: Before we start, tell me, honestly, why should I even care about the way words were pronounced centuries ago?

John: Well, surprising as it may sound, it is useful to know how they would have been pronounced as it changes your appreciation of the texts. Apart from that, it helps to understand why English spellings and pronunciations are so inconsistent today. For instance, for Shakespeare 'love' and 'prove' would have rhymed perfectly well; for us it doesn't work as we pronounce them differently.

Penelope: So weird. This doesn't sound posh at all.

John: That's another mystery which I don't get myself. Shakespearean English is associated with high status and education, but when he was writing his works, it was everyday speech.

Nothing special. Even Elizabeth I, who was the queen then, didn't pronounce words in a way we'd see as upper-crust today.

Penelope: I see. John, you mentioned the correlation between pronunciation and spelling. I'd love to hear more on that, if you don't mind.

John: It's quite simple. As at the time there were no rules and standards on how to write words, texts were written phonetically. So, in Queen Elizabeth I's letters the word 'together' is written as 'together' — t-o-g-i-th-e-r, and 'servant' as 'sarvant' with two a's.

Penelope: So, she had a very down-to-earth manner of speaking in contrast to the one she is portrayed with in a recent movie.

John: That super silly historic fiction you are so fond of, you mean?

Penelope: The documentary.

John: Then a biographical period drama film, to be precise.

Penelope: Oh, it's so confusing. Whatever the genre, I love that movie. Anyway, could you please tell me about the difference between OP and RP?

Presenter: Good afternoon to those of you who listen to us every Monday in real time! Good day to those who are going to listen to the podcast later. It's noon and Jacob Davies and Jane Sallie are here for you today. Hi, Jane!

Jane Sallie: Hi, Jacob!

Presenter: Jane, is it true that you've discovered a way to unlock your hidden potential?

Jane Sallie: Oh, yes! You do know that as a reporter I read hundreds of books a year. I watch thousands of videos and listen to hundreds of hours of audio podcasts. I'd love to say that I do that to become a better professional or to stay up-to-date, but truth be told, I'm a total content junkie. Most of the things that go in, do not stick in my head for long. But I've found a way how to deal with it!

Presenter: So, what is it?

Jane Sallie: I call it a Goldfish notebook. Firstly, because goldfish are notorious for their short attention span which is only nine seconds, and I guess mine is even shorter. Secondly, because they are smart and you can even train them to do some tricks. And last but not least, goldfish are also known to be helpful in increasing the good luck of a house and of a person who owns them. So, if you want to keep those shining fish...

Presenter: Jane, sorry for bringing you back, but we were talking about your Goldfish notebook. How did you come across this idea and what is it about?

Jane Sallie: Oh. Sorry. I was watching one of those recordings on productivity, or marketing, or something. I cannot say for sure. And it was like a lightning bolt for me. The recording was about keeping a diary that is not truly a diary. The idea is that you keep it on your lap while browsing the net or consuming content in general and you write there whatever comes to your mind.

Presenter: Are there any rules? Maybe a particular format you should follow, or all those bells and whistles like in a bullet journal?

Jane Sallie: No. Nothing like that. It's quite the opposite actually. You may do whatever you like there and however you like it. You may recall a line from a song, or get an idea while reading a book, or just remember that you forgot to add milk to your grocery list, just add it to the notebook. You may doodle, or scribble ideas as fast as possible and go back to your content. If it doesn't take much to grab your attention and yank you from your working mind, then you'll find this idea very appealing. It's like a dustbin for all those ideas that you juggle in your head all the time. They come and go, you jot them down in the notebook and return your focus to the content at hand.

Presenter: Why does it work? Is there a scientific explanation for that?

Jane Sallie: There is. As we all know, our conscious mind, the one that helps us to be present here and now is a weak part of our brain. The subconscious one, the one responsible for generating ideas, for being creative, emotional, whatnot is the actual workhorse of our brain. When we read, or watch, or listen to something, our mind wanders now and then. Every time you get that little wander, tune in instead of tuning out. And you'll see that if you allow yourself to get distracted for a moment, you'll stay focused longer. Moreover, you won't have to juggle all those potentially brilliant ideas in your head and will have access to them later.

Presenter: Can you give an actual example of how the notebook has helped you?

Jane Sallie: Sure. Just this week alone, my Goldfish notebook helped me to come up with a few pretty catchy headlines for my articles, and gave me an idea of what topic I should cover next. A friend of mine, who also got caught on the notebook, got some game-changing ideas for her publishing business.

Presenter: So, in a nutshell, if you have this free-for-all notebook and curate your ideas later, you might uncover your hidden potential?

Jane Sallie: Yes. As simple as it sounds. Just remember that the best ideas return.

Speaker A

I think there is too much competition at work nowadays. Everybody is longing for promotion and often trying to move on to a better position in another company. On the contrary, teamwork aims at a company's accomplishments. When employees understand they can get ahead with their own company, they cooperate with colleagues and work more effectively to get better common and personal results.

Speaker B

It's very important to understand people around you. If you are a manager, you'd better take time and listen to your colleagues, employees, face to face, if possible. Pay attention to non-verbal ways of communication, as appropriate gestures and eye contact can do more than even words of praise or criticism. The same piece of advice goes to employees. Explain to your management your decisions in detail and you'll get a reputation as a well-balanced person and better career prospects.

Speaker C

I think it is difficult for men and women to work in the same space. Women are more creative and emotional whereas men are more logical and better organized. Women want to feel, men want to think. Any department, if it considers these differences, will be much better off with men and women working separately, without distracting each other, causing conflicts and misunderstandings.

Speaker D

What I dislike about some offices is that there is too much gossip there. It does not depend on who dominates there — men or women. Actually, men are sometimes even worse! It gets on my nerves when people begin to discuss their manager, the latest teambuilding activity or their domestic affairs. It distracts me and is simply unpleasant. To create some personal space and work effectively, I listen to music instead.

Speaker E

I think there should be a law for people not to go to work if they are ill or upset. To work effectively is simply impossible if someone is coughing or wants to scream at you instead of listening to your requests or suggestions. Any manager must ensure that the office environment is calm and appropriate for work. To introduce some relaxation techniques might be a good idea as well.

Speaker F

What is important in any office is that you get a clear explanation of what exactly to do from your management. There should not be any room for confusion or misinterpretation. If instructions can be understood as suggestions, there will not be any result. Instructions in the written form are simply perfect. If you are provided with details of a desirable result, this will be a key to completing the task successfully, I think.

Jack: Hello, Mary! You look great and you have a wonderful tan! What did you do at the weekend?

Mary: Hello, Jack. Well, my parents and I had a long drive to the countryside to Sherwood Forest. My father is very much interested in Robin Hood, you know. Then we had lunch in a vintage inn in the summer garden. It was fantastic!

Jack: A vintage inn? What is that? Is it a kind of a countryside pub?

Mary: Not really. Actually, there are a lot of them, close to many major sights in Great Britain. They may look village-like, but the standards of service are very high and the food is very tasty.

Jack: I don't find such places amusing. Besides, the prices there are usually huge.

Mary: It is not cheap, I agree. At the same time, a lunch in London can be even more expensive indeed. Where else can you try a traditional pudding or delicious Cheddar Mash after all?

Jack: Still, I do not see any point in driving miles from London just to have a light lunch. What will you do there except gazing out of the window across a village green or a natural pond if you are lucky?

Mary: I cannot agree with you here, I am afraid. Vintage inns are generally located in places worth visiting like stately homes or historic villages or any other tourist attractions and many are close to enchanting walks. It is not only about a meal! As for staying indoors, as I said, most vintage inns have their own gardens and they are ideal to have lunch in fine weather. That is where I got my tan anyway.

Jack: Well, you seem to have managed to persuade me. Next weekend I am going to Cardiff. Is there a vintage inn close?

Mary: There must be one. If you take a look at the map, you will certainly discover the closest vintage inn.

Jack: It may turn out not as good as the one you visited last weekend, though.

Mary: According to the travel brochure, every vintage inn is different, but they are all the same. They may have different designs and menus, but all landlords and landladies share the same passion for good food and excellent service, believe me!

Jack: Ok, can you lend me the map? I am sure you took one in the inn you visited.

Mary: You know me well enough! I will bring it tomorrow, I promise.

Jack: Thanks.

Now we are ready to start.

Presenter: With us in the studio today we have a girl from the famous Indian tribe — the Navaho. Could you please introduce yourself to the audience?

Helen: People call me Helen, though it is not my real name. All our names have special meanings; my original name for instance can be translated as 'dewdrop' from my native language.

Presenter: That is a beautiful name indeed! Why would one change it?

Helen: You see I had to when I went to school. It was not easy for my teachers and classmates to pronounce it as our system — I mean the Navaho system — of vowel sounds is so much different for people around, which makes it problematic both for ear and tongue. The sound of my name was closest to Helen so I put up with that.

Presenter: When people hear your tribe name, they imagine Indian-style tents and horse riding without a saddle. Could you explain what your land and people are like?

Helen: Much about the life of modern Native Americans is not the same as stereotypes may make you believe. Our land is basically a desert, with proper houses scattered everywhere. We no longer live in our traditional teepees. They are only used for religious meetings. We still ride horses as the land is very open. The people are nice and friendly. I live in a small community in New Mexico.

Presenter: Could you tell us about your family?

Helen: Well, mine is very large, with a lot of relatives spread all over the reservation, and some in different cities. I have three brothers, a sister and three sisters-in-law. I'm the youngest of my family. However, it is not a must, not all our families are the same size. They used to be like ours, but not anymore.

Presenter: What is your lifestyle like?

Helen: Again, far from stereotypes. I go out with friends and wear clothes like an ordinary person — we only wear squaw dresses on certain occasions. I play all types of sports.

Presenter: Do you feel that your traditions are being kept or have they been destroyed, as your people become more influenced by European culture?

Helen: In some families Navaho traditions are kept — they are in my family. Other families are being influenced by white culture, but I think it is wrong for a Navaho to be completely like a white person. Something truly authentic must remain.

Presenter: Is English your first language?

Helen: When I was a child, I was taught both English and Navaho. Now I have partly forgotten the latter — I can understand almost anything but speaking or writing may create a problem for me. The elders understand our language best.

Presenter: What do you do on an average weekend?

Helen: I go to Farmington, the nearest large town, and go shopping, eat out, and then go to the movies. A great weekend would be going to the mall where I'd hang out with friends.

Presenter: Have you traveled much? What is your favourite place?

Helen: Yes, I have traveled. My favourite place is Connecticut. I would like to go overseas some day and see how people are there, and what their lifestyle is like. Navaho people are hospitable and we welcome travelers in our land too.

Presenter: Thank you, Helen.

Speaker A

I'm trying to get back on track again with healthy food. I've been really bad this couple of months, resulting in a horrible weight gain. I still go to the gym 3-4 times a week, but I eat a lot of unhealthy snacks between meals. I somehow thought it's my reward for going to the gym, but it certainly made me gain more weight rather than lose it. I figure if I can replace my dinner with fruits, I will achieve weight loss easily and in a healthy way. But the problem is, after the gym when I feel really hungry the first thing I look for is something savoury.

Speaker B

My name is Jenna and I'm 17 years old. I'd never had weight issues until last year. I had some problems that made me very depressed, so I ate all the time and watched TV because I didn't want to leave the house. I know that's not an excuse for eating so unhealthily, but I was in my own little world, you could say. I'm a very athletic person and I still have all my muscle, but I've just gained weight. I've decided to start my diet on Wednesday and work out Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays with one of my friends.

Speaker C

I am utterly frustrated at the moment. My weight is not moving in the right direction. Which is not surprising since I just can't resist food, especially unhealthy food. Like yesterday, I went to the supermarket and bought strawberries and grapes and apples only to go back 20 minutes later to get a marble cake. I only ate two slices of it and it was all I had for dinner but still it makes me angry. Sometimes I feel it has to be either all or nothing. I just know that eating nothing is not the right thing to do and that it won't help in the long run.

Speaker D

I'm doing really well. I thought that when I came home from school I would balloon up, because my mom is an awesome cook and when I'm home I work two jobs and I am always too tired to exercise. Plus, at school the gym is free and at home it most certainly is not. However, I've managed to stay at the same weight, and am at my lowest weight on my mom's scale! I eat around 1200-1400 calories a day so that my parents don't suspect anything, but I know they're impressed with my weight loss. I am too!

Speaker E

My name is Bobbi. I'm a sophomore in college and live in the dorm. This is the first time I've experienced living on my own. So I can go to any grocery shop and get whatever I want or go out to eat whenever I want. I stopped being active after the swim season was over in my senior year of high school. My weight has steadily increased since then because of my eating and exercise habits alone, I think. So I have asked my doctor recently to work out a special combination of diet and sport activities. I hope it will help.

Speaker F

I wish I could just kick the pounds away but alas, no way. I cannot starve myself, and also, I don't want to. Still, I want to lose weight, as fast as possible, of course. I thought I'd try to eat healthy food and exercise a lot but it's just so hard to come home and not plunder the fridge. It's so difficult to change one's lifestyle. I need some support and encouragement from somebody who understands how difficult it is to solve my problem.

Susan: Sally, have you read "Alice's Adventures in Wonderland"?

Sally: Yes. My mother read and loved it when she was younger and I have her copy. I loved it when I was younger, and even more now that I understand the metaphors and the irony.

Susan: Personally, I have a great love for the Caterpillar. And who is your favourite character from the book?

Sally: I think it is the Mad Hatter. His madness and playfulness helps me understand who I am or at least try to be as a person. What is your favourite passage from the book?

Susan: I love when the queen says "Sometimes I've believed in as many as six impossible things before breakfast."

Sally: My favourite passage is Alice's conversation with herself as she falls down the rabbit hole. It was in that moment that I really fell in love with the quaint little girl named Alice.

Susan: Do you think that the book has any undertones, or do you merely love it as it is, a book written in an eccentric and witty style, full of twisted adventures?

Sally: I would say there are many witty, eccentric, slightly twisted books out there. Of course I think there are undertones. There are so many undertones in fact that I'm afraid the Alice book may become too outdated and cryptic for today's children.

Susan: Oh, no! I think of it as a contemporary book that can be enjoyed for years to come. I hope my children will read the same cherished copy I read and my mother read before me.

Sally: By the way, what is your favourite film adaptation of the Alice book?

Susan: I am not as familiar with the film adaptations as I am with the novel and musical interpretations. I quite like a music video that a friend of mine has done to the song "White Rabbit", but I suppose my favourite Alice film is the Disney version.

Sally: Yes. I highly respect Walt Disney and his work, and I think the movie is well done. Though I much prefer the book itself, Disney was not afraid to add a little bit of himself to the film, which I respect him for.

Now we are ready to start.

Again, I'm not sure how this works in any other part of the world. At my university we have a student-elected body of representatives called "The Union". It is a quasi-political body, elected from the student body and meant to represent the student body as a whole. However, I have doubts about their ability to represent me, and any other mature student at that university.

Let me begin by saying that this year's President likes to be called "Gravy". The behavior of the Union on the whole reflects this level of maturity. This year I ran for the office, I promised someone that I would run. A random meeting with next year's President and a rant about how ineffectual I thought the Union was brought this about, and I must say, my mates gave me a lot of support. However, I did not make the effort to canvass, I did not want the position.

Yes, if more mature and experienced people do not join, what hope is there of this body being more representative? I should feel worse than I do about my lax efforts, but there is no way in the world I could sit in an office with these people without ranting and raving at them. How can a body of 19 and 20 year olds represent a student body that ranges from 18 to 80? In the UK, more and more mature students are returning to study every year. If the body that is meant to represent them discusses issues like the ethics of every single product in the Union shop, or whether not allowing Al-Qaeda to operate from the university is discrimination or not ... they are simply not represented. How can I present problems specific to a mature student to someone with little or no life experience themselves?

This became evident in a short time and I did not actually take any notice of the elections because these were not elections based on any kind of merit, but on how popular someone is, or how much attention they can draw to themselves during the elections by dressing up. When I see taxpayers' money wasted on these things (and yes, it is that money that is used) it makes me see red. The Union has a very important job to do, and unfortunately it does not do it very well at all. The Union would perform better as a non-elected body where people with experiences of the issues and methods do the work, rather than young and inexperienced people who want nothing more than a jolly good time with their mates, and something to put on their CV.

I have overheard some people talking about this on occasions. They think that there is something wrong with the situation. In my opinion, there's definitely something wrong with it.

I never thought that this was what university would be about. I am there for a reason, to learn. I sold my house to finance this degree, it is a pretty major commitment for me, so of course I am going to take it seriously.

Speaker A

I think people should pay more attention to reusing materials. It's the best way to save our planet's resources. In fact, we don't have any other option if we plan to leave the planet for generations to come. For example, it's more environment-friendly to use linen napkins that can be washed and reused than to use paper products. It's also important to stop using dangerous chemicals that spoil our soil and drinking water.

Speaker B

My name is Stephen. I'm very worried about high urban pollution. This problem is actually global. Anyone who went to Beijing to watch the Olympic games can confirm it as Beijing was covered day and night by strong smog. The problem is that this smog in big industrial megapolises is not set to decrease, but instead it will increase over the coming years: this will bring about pollution all over the world and will cause global warming!

Speaker C

I find the effect of water pollution on the ecological balance and human life really dramatic. Though there are many other things that are polluting water, oil is still the major contributor. There may be cases of large oil spills during transportation, but the fact is that small motor oil spills on land are far more dangerous. So it's important that we take measures in time to save our water environment.

Speaker D

My name is Barbara. I've only been "cleaning green" for over a year now. It was a difficult start. My daughter made me stop using toxic chemical products for cleaning by regularly telling me how I was poisoning our health, polluting the air in the house, damaging the planet and exposing my grandson to all of the above. Now I like it a lot! I will never go back to chemical cleaners, not any more.

Speaker E

I support the idea of using only natural products for cleaning purposes. Of course it's not easy. Changing from old habits to new healthy, non-toxic ones takes time and practice. It's like any bad habit, once it's been done we feel really good about ourselves. But we're not doing this for some unseen stranger. We're doing it for ourselves. Let's leave our planet in the best possible shape we can by all working out and following new rules together.

Speaker F

I think everyone can do their part to protect our planet. It's easier than you may think — do not litter and do not dispose your waste in the way that will harm people or animals. Always use the proper method for it. And it's really more useful to put out different bins for different waste materials like glass, plastic bottles, paper and tins. The bins are usually of different colours to be easily identified.

Kate: Hi, Jerry. The school year is almost over. Do you have any plans for the summer holiday?

Kate: Oh, come on, Jerry, you must be joking.

Jerry: Yeah, I'm just pulling your leg. Actually, I'm going to travel to Luxor in Egypt.

Kate: Really? Why would you go to Luxor but not to the Red Sea resorts? They're much more popular tourist sites.

Jerry: Exactly! They are very popular, so they'll be too crowded. What I need is peace and comfort. I enjoyed my last year trip to Paris to see the Eiffel Tower, but there were so many tourists there. I think it spoiled the atmosphere a bit.

Kate: I'm sure Luxor won't be so crowded. But won't it be too hot in the summer?

Jerry: I'll bear anything for the sake of the views of this ancient Egyptian city. And I rely on air conditioning inside — the hotel promises it works perfectly there.

Kate: Well, that sounds good. I wouldn't mind going there myself then. Still, I wonder ... is there anything worth seeing in Luxor?

Jerry: Sure! For one thing, there's the unique scenery of the city built directly on the Nile. I'm sure you've heard of Luxor Temple. There are also the Egyptian Pyramids which are said to be spectacular. They are a major tourist attraction, aren't they?

Kate: Of course, I have heard of the Pyramids, but won't you get bored just looking at them?

Jerry: Come on, Kate, there're lots of things to do. I can take a river cruise on the Nile, and I will visit some excavation sites at Luxor as it is a very historical city with many ancient remains that are still amazing.

Kate: Well, when you describe it like that, it sounds really interesting!

Jerry: And that's not all. I'll be able to eat delicious, spicy food and enjoy swimming and sunbathing as they have a huge open-air swimming pool in the hotel.

Kate: I'm sure you'll have fun, Jerry, but let me ask you — have you already reserved a room at the hotel you want? I find last minute bookings very disappointing.

Presenter: With us in the Studio today we have James Smith, a psychologist from the University of North Carolina. Good afternoon, James.

James Smith: Good afternoon. I am really glad to be taking part in this programme — it is a great honour for me.

Presenter: Thank you. The topic we have for today is familiar to everybody — this is our dreams. We all have dreams and are dreaming of our dreams coming true if I can put it that way! James knows exactly how to do it. Is that so, James?

James Smith: I think it is. One of the amazing things we have been given as humans is the desire to have dreams and the ability to establish goals to live out those dreams. What makes it even more powerful is our ability not only to dream and pursue those dreams but the cognitive ability to actually lay out a plan and strategies to achieve those dreams. The question is how to do it.

Presenter: Can you define what are our dreams and goals?

James Smith: This is not what you already have or what you have done, but what you want. Have you ever taken time to think over your life values and decide what you really want? Have you ever truly reflected and listened quietly to your heart to see what dreams live within you? Your dreams are there. Everybody has them. They may live right on the surface or be hidden deeply if you are often told sarcastically they are not serious but they are still there.

Presenter: So how do we know what our dreams are?

James Smith: This is an interesting process and it relates primarily to the art of listening. This is not listening to others; it is listening to you. If we listen to others, we hear their plans and dreams and many of them will try to put their dreams and plans on us. If we listen to others, we can never be fulfilled. We will only chase elusive dreams. So we must listen to our own hearts.

Presenter: That seems easy and difficult at the same time. Do you know any practical steps on hearing from our hearts on what our dreams are?

James Smith: Firstly, take time to be quiet. This is something that we do not do enough in this busy world of ours. Schedule some dream time — no other people, no cell phone or computer. Just you, a pad and a pencil and your thoughts! Think about what thrills you, what you would love to do either for fun or for a living. When you answer these questions, you will find yourself in the “dream zone”. Only when we get to this point, we will experience what our dreams are.

Presenter: What should we do next?

James Smith: Secondly, write down all of your dreams as you have them. Do not think of any as too outlandish or foolish — remember, you are dreaming! Let the thoughts fly and take careful record. Then, prioritize those dreams. Which are most important? Which are most feasible? Which would you love to do the most? Put them in the order in which you will actually try to attain them. Remember, we are always moving toward action, not just dreaming.

Presenter: What if a person does not find time to do all of this?

James Smith: Here is the big picture: life is too short and when it comes to the end, you can reflect on it either with joy or regret. Those who dream, who set goals and act on them to live out their dreams are those who live lives of joy and have a sense of peace.

Presenter: What is your final piece of advice?

James Smith: Remember about the dreams and goals that are born out of your heart and mind. These are the goals that are unique to you and come from who you were created to be and gifted to become. Your specific goals are what you want to attain because they will make your life joyful!

Presenter: Thank you, James.

Speaker A

We have a great variety of food available now, but I think we should care a lot more about where our food comes from. I think if people started to buy local and went to farmers' markets, they would be amazed at how fresh and tasty everything is. Vegetables are the best choice when they are in season, and simple food can be easy to prepare.

Speaker B

There are still people who think that it costs more money than it really does to eat well. It worries me that people are happy to spend thousands of dollars on a car, but don't want to spend more than 2.50 on a chicken. We all need to be aware of what we are putting in our mouths but we seem to attach far more importance to clothes than food.

Speaker C

When I was a child we used to eat healthy food without thinking about it — you could rarely see preserved or processed food in stores. Big home-cooked family meals were central to my childhood. Nowadays, while some families have kept that tradition, generally we've lost a connection with food, and that makes me pessimistic about our eating habits.

Speaker D

No doubt there will always be people who prefer to eat out, and there is a place for ready-made meals, but I believe we've started to understand the advantages of simple local produce, and the harm of all these preservatives and chemicals in processed food. We are beginning to realise that freshly prepared ingredients, cooked simply, are much better than ready-made meals.

Speaker E

Growing your own produce is a fantastic way to get better food. You grow what you want and, when you dig it up, it's on the table an hour later. There are always things you can grow, even if you don't have a garden or a piece of land — herbs in a pot on your kitchen windowsill will make the difference in any dish you cook because they are so fresh.

Speaker F

We are able to buy much better food than ten years ago, but what is really missing is the culture of cooking at home. We have two generations of children who didn't stand at their parents' shoulders and learn how to cook — and a few TV shows are not going to change that. Many children, especially in big cities, don't know what flour is or where milk comes from.

Mary: Hey, John! Tomorrow is Valentine's Day! Do you remember?

John: Do I remember? I've spent loads of money on Valentine cards, to say nothing of postage costs!

Mary: That's funny! I thought one was supposed to buy and send a card to just one person. Isn't that the point?

John: It used to be, but I think not anymore. You are expected to send cards to teachers, relatives, neighbours ... This is ridiculous — but be ready for some caustic comments if you forget somebody from this list! People have completely forgotten the fact that there was a time when this holiday was close to being forbidden — I guess it was in 1969.

Mary: That's sad, but you are probably right. For example, have you heard that, according to the statistics, teachers receive the most Valentines, followed by kids, mothers and only then spouses or sweethearts?

John: This doesn't surprise me at all. Valentine's Day is probably the second largest card-sending holiday in the world.

Mary: Only the second? How come?

John: I think you are missing Christmas, aren't you? You know Hallmark employs 80 people every year to research the sales pattern of previous Valentines. That is big business for them.

Mary: Much depends on clever advertising; that's the fact. Do you know that in Japan after the successful campaign of a chocolate factory, women began to give men a box of sweets for Valentine's Day?

John: Never! I don't believe it! At least lucky men in Japan don't have to buy bunches of roses.

Mary: A bouquet is important indeed. You don't want to send mixed signals with it, do you?

John: What do you mean?

Mary: The colour of flowers, of course! Red can mean romantic love or just deep respect. Peach can tell a person of your gratitude or appreciation. Pink symbolizes perfection and black says farewell. Imagine you mix black and red or peach and pink.

John: This is completely over my head. I doubt many people still remember these archaic rules.

Mary: You never know! OK, I've got to go. See you tomorrow.

John: All right. I hope you'll have a card for me!

Mary: I certainly will!

Presenter: With us in the studio today we have Steven Roberts, a world-recognized expert in teaching foreign languages. Good afternoon, Steven.

Steven Roberts: Good afternoon.

Presenter: Steven, everybody wants to speak at least one foreign language. You are constantly in search of new effective ways of teaching a foreign language. What are the most modern ways of improving one's language skills independently?

Steven Roberts: There are many methods indeed, but the thing I am presently researching is using films as a teacher. Many people feel like watching the original version of a foreign movie they liked. What I offer is a unique educational programme accompanied by the original film in the original language with original subtitles. Our programme is run entirely in a foreign language and instead of classics it introduces slang expressions, new vocabulary, modern grammar, listening comprehension practice as well as comments by native speakers to the audience.

Presenter: That sounds really innovative! Can you please tell us how this idea crossed your mind?

Steven Roberts: Well, when you start communicating with native speakers in a foreign language, you soon decide you are fluent and you have almost accomplished your goal of true bilingualism. However, as soon as you watch a movie in a foreign language, you feel lost. Films are difficult to understand precisely because they are so real world, at least from a linguistic perspective. This may make watching original films very frustrating even for advanced speakers of any language, but the fact remains that there is probably no better source of linguistic input than a good film, if, paradoxically, you could just understand what is being said.

Presenter: It seems to me though, not every learner may find this programme appropriate.

Steven Roberts: True. Movies are a good tool for fluent students. They are ideal for those language learners who fall into the linguistic zone of frustrated fluency discussed earlier. They are designed for upper level learners for the simple reason that they will be most effective as learning tools if you can already understand the language well enough to generally hear where one word ends and another begins. For lower level students, like pre-intermediate or elementary, I would advise to watch films, but not authentic, of course.

Presenter: If a person cannot take part in your programme, but still wants to try using films in their studies, what could you recommend?

Steven Roberts: Find a group of like-minded people and start a film club! The goals of such a club can be to help maintain your language proficiency and to upgrade it as well to give you a chance to enjoy original movies! In 2002 I developed a methodology called "Foreign Languages through Films and Media" which is a copyright and can be got in bookstores or via Internet and used for your club's shows. Apart from this inexpensive book and some DVDs you will not need anything — well, of course you will need a place where to meet, watch films and discuss them.

Presenter: For those who would like to join your programme after the interview, will you please give some contact details?

Steven Roberts: Certainly.

Speaker A

Right now I'm trying to find a way to regain a healthy lifestyle despite being busy. I've completely lost the athleticism that was a large part of my identity and I can't stand it any more. Now I'm trying to regain general fitness. So I've been biking to work (about 20 minutes) for two months now, trying to get more veggies and whole grain in my life, drinking lots of water, and I'm hoping to start walking more, although right now I have to work a lot and usually feel too exhausted after work to do anything else.

Speaker B

My name is Katie, I'm 25 years old, and I started making a conscious effort to develop healthy habits about a year ago. The first thing I did was give up smoking. My goals are mainly to exercise regularly, drink enough water, and eat fruits and veggies daily. I do keep track of what I eat with journaling, although I'm not a calorie counter, and I don't own scales or restrict myself in any way. I just want to be stronger and feel better through trying to meet those goals every day. Now I feel I can do it.

Speaker C

A year or so ago, I was in pretty good shape and paying a lot of attention to my health. I slipped back into inactivity and unhealthy eating for various reasons. I miss what I had, but I've had a hard time finding the motivation to return to my usual healthy lifestyle. Spring is just arriving — sunny sky, warmer weather, longer days, green leaves peeking up from last season's dead grass. The improvement in the weather is lifting my spirits, so I've decided to take advantage of the extra energy and design for myself a spring fitness challenge.

Speaker D

I have just realised that at least six days out of seven, I do the amount of exercise that is recommended for those whose goal is a healthy lifestyle, just by walking during my daily routine. About three times a week, I do more, sometimes considerably more. Despite that, I often do myself down by telling people I don't exercise at all. I think some part of my brain still believes that because I'm doing it as part of my routine rather than going to any special effort, it can't be taken into account.

Speaker E

Hi! I'm Alex. I've had terribly unhealthy eating habits for the last few years. I never took much time to eat and ended up eating very few meals. I'm trying to develop healthier eating habits, and I wonder what would constitute a balanced meal. For breakfast I eat a bowl of cereal and yogurt. Then grab five pieces of fruit I divide between lunch and dinner. It's more than I usually eat, but I know there's still a lot of room for improvement. At the same time I'm worried about going overboard, which can happen very easily for me.

Speaker F

I am 27 years old, and I come from a family of rather overweight people. I've been working to live a more healthy and fit lifestyle since last December. Over the past three years, I've watched older relatives dealing with serious health problems, and it's been a wake up call for me to start taking care of myself while I'm young and my state of health hasn't become worse. I'd like to start a family in the next couple of years, and it would be great to be able to keep up with my children as the years go by.

Mike: I'm 39 now and I resumed my studies when my son started Grade One. Now I'm very happy that I made up my mind to do this. I'll be graduating in April and hopefully start teaching high school English in September.

Mary: What had you been doing before you went to university?

Mike: I had been doing administrative work for 13 years, straight out of high school. I had got very tired and fed up with the low pay and the monotonous nature of the work. So I started university.

Mary: That's a right decision, indeed. As for me, I went to university at more or less the normal age. I was actually 21 at the time. But I did so miserably that the university suggested that I not return. Since then I've been basically wasting my time.

Mike: And what are your plans?

Mary: You see, one day I was fiddling around on the web and found some information about distance learning. It's fabulous if you can't take the time out to go to people-ridden classes, because you can work it around your own schedule.

Mike: Yes, I think the fact that you can do the work in your own space and your own time is really helping.

Mary: Of course, I will have deadlines to meet, but they're not the same as the in-class sort. Handing things in doesn't depend on anyone else's office hours or class times, which is really handy. I will only have to contact my tutors when I want to or need to, or when I'm required to do an oral quiz or exam.

Mike: I think it's a very good idea. Going to university was the best thing I have ever done. I found it was more fun than I expected, and the benefits outweighed the disadvantages. I learned so much about myself, and I'm very proud of my accomplishments!

Mary: And I expect my ability to study to be much better than it used to be and things come much more easily. While I still see doing some of the work as a chore, at least this time around I'm actually enjoying it.

Now we are ready to start.

I've lived in Denmark now for nearly four years, and I've changed a lot within this time. I've become more fashionable, more cosmopolitan-minded, more ...Danish — if I'm allowed to say that.

But one thing hasn't changed about me. And that is my inability to cooperate with or understand Danish supermarket culture. As someone who was raised predominantly in the United States, I've always been used to grocery stores with a selection of food choices so huge that it's almost perverted. That and a high level of service. In an American grocery store, one can find a kind of product with a thousand different brandings and types. For example, let's take the flakes varieties: whole grain frosted flakes, or fat-free frosted flakes. Do I want my cream cheese with low, medium, or full fat? Seedless watermelons or watermelons with seeds? That being said, when I walk into a Danish grocery store I want to burst into tears because I'm so bored with the selection. The variety of cereals consists of Cherrios, Honey-nut Cherrios, and Wheaties. Coco-puffs if I'm lucky. There're few fruits and vegetables, most rotten. I'm telling you, everything is so boring and plain and demanding of hard kitchen labour that you just wish some American food companies could establish factories here and import some ready made dinners.

I know I should be ashamed of saying this, but I do miss American convenience. In Denmark, making a homemade meal requires at least 30 dollars spent at the grocery store and 2 hours in the kitchen. For instance, at my local grocery store, nothing is allowed to be under 4 dollars. That's right, it's called organic and healthy food, free of anything synthetic or "fast"-related. But I do miss synthetic food.

Oh yes, the whole Danish, "do-it-yourself" attitude prevails! Expect to stress while bagging all of your food, as no one will do it for you.

The only way to really understand what I mean is to imagine that if you've come from America and you're used to certain things with service and product selection and then you move here — it truly is different in Denmark. And I've lived elsewhere in Europe (Iceland, England, Spain) and I still find the grocery stores much better and with more selection in those countries.

However, how could anyone take me serious when I say, "I miss synthetic food"? That is purely attempting to be sarcastic, and I see that it is wrong and disgusting that American food is pumped up with so much crap. I really appreciate that in Denmark the food is free of everything artificial and it shows on Danes — most of them look healthy and fit here. But once in a while I miss the vastness of an American grocery store!

I want to add that I am Danish, was born in Denmark, lived here for 5 years as a child and then moved to America where I lived most of my life. I moved back here a few years ago and I love the country. I speak Danish. I'm not an immigrant in Denmark who is unsatisfied with the way of life here and who should move back to the States. I'm a student and of course it takes 2 hours to make a meal on my own.

Speaker A

Hi! What's your favourite book? A book that you love because it inspires you, or has changed your life? What I'd like to do is go to a secondhand book store, pick up a book that maybe I have read or maybe I haven't, purchase it, read it, then leave it someplace else for someone else to find and read and pass on. I know a lot of times things like that don't work — people don't read them or pass them on. But oddly, I can't explain why, I have the urge to do it. Maybe this happens because I love books and want everyone to try them.

Speaker B

I enjoy one book very much. I have read it at least 20 times and it is always wonderful. Every time I read the novel as if I have no idea of what happens on its pages and I am never bored with it. It is truly a success story about a woman who managed to do well despite her poor environment. Sometimes the author becomes a bit wordy but it is a stunning memoir. I adore reading memoirs such as these about strong people who endure and do well despite their circumstances. They teach us to be strong and to resist any problems.

Speaker C

I've been reading "Bleak House" for some time now, over a month I'd estimate, and probably closer to 6 weeks. I'm half way through, and I find it difficult to enjoy. Dickens's convoluted way of getting to the point seems little mollified by the beautiful language, and although the dialogue is thoroughly enjoyable, I can't help but want to explore other books. This is my first time reading Dickens but I remember feeling this way to a much lesser extent with some other books which didn't have the lure of language to keep me interested.

Speaker D

At a message board I go to they've been polling to see what books everyone has read. The participants are mostly 18 to 22 year old guys who play video games and like reading, so the whole thing is slanted towards high-school curriculum stuff and sci-fi/fantasy. Not exactly scientific or representative of your average American, but still somewhat interesting. I wonder to what extent books can keep young people interested in other parts of the world and if their preferences vary to a greater degree.

Speaker E

I'm going to make a trip to the used bookstore to get rid of some books I have and probably pick some books up at the same time. The problem is, I'm awful at trying to figure out what books to get rid of. I have many books that I've read and probably won't reread but I have a hard time getting rid of them because the majority of them are hardback and they cost a lot. The worst ones are books that I haven't finished but promised to get back to and I think I never will. I'm good at convincing myself to keep books at home.

Speaker F

This might seem a little weird and hard for me to explain, but bear with me. I was checking out movies and books with philosophical concepts, and I came across a list with existentialist concepts. I realised that I've seen or read, and enjoyed, most of the stuff on the list. I've already read "Crime and Punishment" by Dostoevsky and find it a deep philosophical book that really makes you think when you read it. What I'm looking for now are books that can explain in a simple way what the basics of existentialism are.

Tom: I was an exchange student in Denmark in 2005 and had an absolutely awful experience with my host family and my school. They weren't the friendliest of people.

Jack: Oh really? Well, with me there were things that made me a bit sad but in general I enjoyed being there. Yes, I know, people can seem a little cold and, yes, even rude.

Tom: That's it. And in my very first week I got insulted by a bus driver when I was trying to clip my card. Of course it can happen anywhere, but it was a bit sad that no one batted an eyelid.

Jack: It's something I experienced as well, to be honest, but Scandinavians seem to be very sensitive underneath the shell. The harder the shell is, it seems, the more fragile underneath. It's a new set of social rules we need to learn, I guess, when we go to a different country.

Tom: You're right, of course. And despite all my problems, I miss Denmark so much, it's like having a constant stomachache.

Jack: I know what you mean. There are things that I really love there. First, the tap water is drinkable. Then the Metro is gorgeous. It's a pleasure to go by train, as the trains are cute inside.

Tom: What is more, the sky is often starry, because there's little pollution. The air is pretty good. The thing is, I haven't been happy since I returned home to the States. I've gotten to the point that I consider myself more Danish than I do American. But I wonder if it will be difficult to make new friends.

Jack: I have friends who live there now who say it's quite hard to make friends or get into their circle. But, I think, it depends.

Tom: Ideally I plan to move in January. Yes, I know it's the coldest month but if I don't do it then, I'll get all wrapped up in our city's big spring festival and then the football season begins, then my birthday ... you get the idea — and never ...

Jack: Yes, and this will also give you enough time to get a visa.

Today I bought “The Ecological Calendar” that has peculiar formatting on its title. The calendar is apparently available in a few different formats. The one I've bought is a weekly planner for 2007, although it starts at the Winter Solstice, so it includes part of December too. It's partly in the standard Gregorian format, so I don't have to worry about making mistakes in it that take away from its usefulness. In 1997, I had a weekly planner where the week started with Monday instead of Sunday, as it does in some countries, and that little change caused a lot of havoc in any kind of scheduling that I tried to do.

However, it pairs the usual Gregorian calendar with a lot of information about the astronomical and seasonal changes that are happening at that time of year, so that you get the feeling of being connected to the grand cycles of nature. What the plants and animals are doing, when you can look for meteor showers, that sort of thing; it's quite detailed.

This calendar concept is the one that is dear to me. It's part of what I was trying to accomplish when I was working on my own calendar project called “The Book of Days”, which was supposed to give a sense of the passage of time so that each part of the year is meaningful. It would describe the patterns common among all cultures such as the psychological need for relief from the darkest part of winter, and most cultures say that the veil between our world and the other world is thinner at a certain time of the year, even though they don't all agree on when that is. It would tell about the cycles in nature such as seasons, and any light-hearted contemporary events such as Rabbit Hole Day. It didn't just list events, it drew connections between them so that you can get a feel for the significance of the current time.

However, “The Book of Days” was a very time-consuming thing to try and work on every day. I'd hoped that it would become a voluntary group project and thus would lessen the load of each contributing individual, but other people seemed to lack interest. I managed it for several months, but it was too much for one person to manage alone. Eventually I had to let them go off it for more important projects. I still want to see something like “The Book of Days”. That's why I'm so glad to see that someone else has executed a similar project, “The Ecological Calendar”.

I also like the idea of redefining the scope of time that we humans perceive that I have found in “The Clock of The Long Now”, a book I'm in the middle of reading and which has already made a huge impression on me. That book argues that we need to expand our concept of time which looks not only at the present, back into the past and into the future at least a century each, but which also encourages us to learn from the past as well as consider our impact on future generations.

So for 2007, I'll be completely redefining my perception of time to make it more meaningful, although that's something I've been working on for a while now, since calendars fascinate me.

Speaker A

I love reading. I read detective and spy stories, novels, and romantic and fantasy stories. If I'm stuck on a train or waiting for something and don't have anything to read, I feel terrible. So something that I spend a lot of money on would probably be books. I always buy a lot of books, magazines and reader's digests. And I keep all of them at home — my mum says it's horrible. Also lots of my money goes on audio books. I always share them with friends. Em... it's kind of an exchange.

Speaker B

Oh, you know, shiny things really attract me. Every time I have some extra money, I buy bracelets, rings, earrings or necklaces. I wear them everywhere and every day. If I'm shopping somewhere and there is something flashy shining at me, I usually stop and look and very often a salesperson can talk me into buying it. It's crazy I know. I also love buying books but I don't spend so much on them.

Speaker C

Ah, I spend money mostly on um... going out, like going to restaurants or clubs, and things like that. I am a party person, I love hanging out with friends. I don't actually buy a lot of things, like electronics, books or CDs. I just spend money on going out with my friends, on food and drinks for parties. I really love chatting, dancing and making jokes.

Speaker D

Something I probably spend too much on is clothes. I guess because I am a girl, I think of shopping as a fun pastime and I find it relaxing. Actually I call it 'shopping therapy' to go and buy some new clothes. I often go alone — I don't need anyone to advise me. I'd say I love the process of choosing and buying things. It really makes me feel good.

Speaker E

If I had the money I wanted, I would like to go and spend two weeks at every famous place on Earth. I love traveling in comfort. Nowadays it's very expensive. I read travel magazines and surf the Internet for information about different tours, hotels and sights — and now I know how I want to travel. That's what I'd spend my money on if I could.

Speaker F

I usually don't spend that much money on anything like jewellery or clothes. But then if there is one big expense, it is food. I like desserts, especially ice cream, so when I go out for dinner I definitely have a dessert afterwards. I can't live without cakes, candies, chocolates and things like that. Who can?

Receptionist: English Language Center. How may I help you?

Caller: Yes. I've heard about your centre from my classmate and I'm calling to find out more information about your program. What kind of courses do you offer?

Receptionist: Well, first of all, the purpose of our program is to provide language learning opportunities for students who would like to master basic language skills, let's say, for his or her job, or to study intensively to enter a US college or university.

Caller: Okay. I'm calling for a friend who is interested in attending a US university. Can my friend apply for the next semester?

Receptionist: Well, we start in March and always ask applicants to apply no later than two months before the semester begins.

Receptionist: It's two thousand and thirty dollars.

Caller: And how does one apply?

Receptionist: Well, we can send you an application and you can mail it back to us, or you can fill out the application form that's on our website.

Caller: And are there other materials I would need to send in addition to the application form?

Receptionist: Uh, yes. You would need to send in a sponsorship form indicating who will be responsible financially for the student while studying in our program, and a bank statement showing that you or your sponsor has enough money to cover tuition expenses and living costs.

Caller: And how can I send these materials to you?

Receptionist: You can either send the application packet by regular mail or you can fax it.

Receptionist: Okay great.

Caller: Oh and what is your name?

Receptionist: Ok. My name is Tony Nelson. You can just call and ask for me.

Caller: Great. Thank you for your help.

Receptionist: No problem and please don't hesitate to call again if you have any other questions.

Int: Today in the studio we are talking to Ben Zephani, an activist and member of the environmental group the Green Belt Movement in Kenya. Welcome Ben.

Ben: Thank you.

Int: Well, you know, people nowadays talk a lot about environmental issues. There is great concern about wildlife and the future of the National Parks in Kenya. What's happening there?

Ben: One of the most serious environmental problems we are facing today is deforestation, which really affects both wildlife and people living around the forests. People need land for their own purposes, like growing crops and raising cattle. So they come, seize pieces of land, cut down trees and start cultivating the land. So many animals were, kind of, forced away. They had to leave their native habitats and find new hunting areas... That's not really a nice thing.

Int: And what's happening to the people who actually live around the forest area?

Ben: You know when you tend to interfere in a wild animal's habitat you somehow create an imbalance between people and animals. And sometimes it's not really a nice thing because animals tend to come close to where people live, which is really threatening.

Int: So, do they attack people?

Ben: Not that they really attack settlements but they do come in packs, groups, prides or herds constantly migrating from one place to another because of deforestation. So people are vulnerable at any time.

Int: You mean, if I lived there, I could be chased by an angry rhinoceros or an elephant?

Ben: No, actually they don't chase people because most of the time they just pass by. But at times you come into contact with an unusual animal. You know animals live in packs, so when one animal is rejected from its pack, it's an angry animal. It cannot join the other packs so it attacks anything and is extremely dangerous. It should not be disturbed. People can do nothing to help it. Anyone who dares to approach it is almost certainly doomed.

Int: Wow! Sounds horrible! I suppose no one would dare to try to catch these wild animals... Well, but what actually causes deforestation?

Ben: People burn wood to produce charcoal and sell it, because, as you know, people there have very poor living conditions, and they try hard to earn an extra dime to support their families. Charcoal is in great demand for cooking and other odd jobs, so people don't even have to travel anywhere to sell it. It's a good job. But it's so destructive.

Int: So what's being done to try and remedy this, or to try and counterbalance the effect?

Ben: There are three or four large activist groups that are coming together to discuss how to reduce damage to the environment. You all know the Nobel Prize winner Wangari Maathai who is a leader of the Green Belt Movement in Kenya. She's been trying to discourage people from destroying forests for a long time and to explain what deforestation does to the country and the environment in general and how it affects people in the forest areas. She teaches people to adjust to new conditions and environments. She moves with the times. Wangari supports National parks, conservation areas and safari parks in the country. She helps organize small businesses to learn to earn from ecotourism in the forest areas.

Int: Look, I've always wanted to go to Africa and I'm just wondering, if that whole safari business ...is really good; if everything you see on the BBC Wildlife channel, you know, documentaries, is true to life.

Ben: It's not a cliché, but it's something you have to experience when you get there on safari. The BBC has never lied to their viewers.

Int: Wow! So I could be just out there ... driving around in my car and on my own just seeing all those animals?

Ben: I am afraid they won't let you drive in your own car. They provide services for you. We have in Kenya an institute called the KWS: the Kenya Wildlife Service and it has its own wardens that are highly trained to protect you when you're in the forest. You just say where and when you want to go, what places and animals you would like to see. Tours are kind of regulated. For example, you will never be allowed to come close to feeding the animals.

Int: All right.

Задание 1

Speaker A

My cat is rather special. She understands perfectly well when I ask her to come and sit with me, but she can pretend that she doesn't hear. And she always knows which of the people that I invite to my home are okay and which ones aren't. And when I have a headache in the evening she comes and sleeps over my head. I sometimes ask myself how she knows that I have a headache.

Speaker B

When I was 4 years old, my mum found a kitten in the street and brought it home. So, the kitten and I grew up together! I remember that every night the cat would scratch at my door and I let her in. She waited for me to come home from school to be with her and liked watching me, as I was doing my homework. She lived 8 years. And she was truly my cat. I really miss her much.

Speaker C

The thing I love about cats is the way they look. Their eyes are big and the colour is deep — blue like the sky, green like leaves or brown like amber. Their fur can be long or short, and if you treat your cat well, its fur will look shiny and rich. I haven't seen a combination of colours that looked bad on cats — black and white, gray and white, orange and white — they all look perfect.

Speaker D

The best thing about cats is that they're wonderful to talk to when you're sad or angry and you can't control your emotions. Cats won't talk back while you are talking to them, and will listen intently. They make me laugh when I'm in a bad mood, they comfort me when I'm sick. And when I'm happy they start playing with me and we all have lots of fun.

Speaker E

Although I have had many cats, for every one of them there is a reason why we found each other. Now I have three cats. One of them is the boss of my other cats. The second one is very smart and likes to open doors. And the third one thinks that the world turns around her and she is very proud of herself. All of my cats are very special to me because each of them has her or his own character. They are a great part of my life!

Speaker F

What I like about cats is that they can take care of themselves. You don't have to take a cat out for a walk several times a day. You don't need to wash them too often, because they clean themselves. Cats can play on their own and don't require too much of your attention. They can spend most of the time sleeping. And they even can get their own food by catching mice and spiders.

Philip: Ellen, come here and stand by the back door. Look at the rain.

Philip: Remember the last time we had thunder and lightning like this?

The old cherry tree we had in our back yard was struck by lightning. I was afraid the nearby trees would also catch fire. If I'm not mistaken it was two or three years ago. We lost our electrical power as well.

Ellen: Luckily, it was in the middle of the day. Having no electricity at night is a lot different from having none during the day.

Philip: We must have talked about that because I remember going out the next day to buy a box of candles — just in case of a power failure.

Ellen: Well, let's hope that doesn't happen tonight and we won't need them. Shall I call your friend Mark and ask him for dinner? He is a good storyteller and it would be nice to hear one of his stories.

Philip: Why not? Would you hand me the electric mixer, please? I forgot to finish mashing the potatoes.

Ellen: Here you are.

Philip: Thanks.

Ellen: There go the lights. It has happened again. We've got no electricity.

Philip: I can't see a thing. I guess, no mashed potatoes for dinner today.

Ellen: Philip, why don't you call the power company? Tell them we have a problem on Linden Street. And I'll light the candles if I manage to find a box of matches in the cupboard. Here they are. Philip, doesn't the kitchen look great in candlelight?

Philip: It does... I called the company. They already know about the electrical problem. A tree fell onto a power line on the next street. People from nearby houses called them. They don't know how long the lights will be out.

Ellen: Philip, I just thought about Mrs. Romero. She's quite old, and she lives all alone in that big house. Wouldn't she be more comfortable spending the evening with us?

Now we are ready to start.

Interviewer: With us today is Cynthia Barnes, a travel writer. Cynthia, how did you happen to become a travel writer? Let's start with a bit of history. Tell us about your childhood.

Cynthia: I grew up in a small town in the state of Arkansas with kids who had never been to any other places and who desperately wanted to see the world. They used to invent adventures for themselves in order to make up for the monotony of their real life. But I was lucky. My mom used to go on business trips to the neighbouring states and once in a while she took me with her. They were real adventures and I was delighted but it had always been my dream to go to the far off countries I had read about in the 'National Geographic' magazines. There were piles of them in dad's study as well as an unlimited supply of books about explorations and adventures.

Interviewer: What do you usually feel before you set out on a journey?

Cynthia: I remember when I was little the night before we'd leave for a trip I had an absolutely unforgettable feeling — that 'can't-sleep, butterfly feeling'. I couldn't wait to go. It's still with me today.

Interviewer: And how did you get started writing?

Cynthia: I have always been writing. I even won a Daughters of the American Revolution poetry contest in the fifth grade, and they gave me a fifty dollar saving bond. It was a childish little poem that began: 'Our nation, it was founded by brave people long ago ...' Then I moved to Columbia and fell in with a group of writers... Actually after school, all my jobs eventually were about producing newsletters, correcting ads, rewriting bad brochures. I've always kept journals, written letters, played around with personal essays. I never stopped writing. I can't do without it. It's in my blood.

Interviewer: You spend most of your life travelling. What do you do when you don't travel?

Cynthia: If I don't travel, I write. But I don't stop travelling, to be honest. I travel everywhere at any time and in any possible way: by car, by plane, by horse or camel, by canoe or simply on foot.

Interviewer: Is it the major challenge for you as a travel writer?

Cynthia: Well, you see, travelling is a great pleasure and a thrill for me although some of my friends find it tiring to be constantly away from home for a long time. I like meeting new people, hearing their stories, tasting their food. But writers need time alone to reflect on what they have seen, what they have heard. And that's where the problem lies. In a true-to-life story, a lot depends on whether you can balance your own solitary exploration and other people' stories. When you're with others, you're distracted. But when you're by yourself, you have only your own impressions and observations and they can be misleading.

Interviewer: What was the most thrilling experience you had as a traveller?

Cynthia: It was an incredible expedition together with two adventurous travellers. We went to the rainforest in New Guinea, the most remote forest on Earth. We trekked across the island and lived with the local tribe. They are hunters, they live in total isolation from the rest of the world. Their only tools are stone axes and arrows. To survive in the jungle with them was a hard-core challenge. We had to learn how to eat insects as we simply couldn't hunt even small wild animals the way they do. But in fact the biggest challenge was to establish contacts with the local tribe. You see, when we arrived, they met us with arrows, which they pointed at our heads very aggressively. It wasn't the kind of greeting we were used to. We didn't know a word in their language to speak to them, to ask them what all these rituals meant. We had to learn all this stuff to survive, to watch our gestures and tone of voice or we would die in the jungle.

Interviewer: What advice would you give to someone who is considering going into travel writing?

Cynthia: It's great work... but it's work. It's also an obligation. You are in charge of what you write. Maybe your reader will never go to a place you're writing about but he has always dreamt about it. Don't sell yourself or your observations short. And never ever trade your stories for TV clips. Writing is not about bargaining or getting profits. Telling stories about travel is an honorable profession. Mark Twain was a travel writer. So was Hemingway.

Interviewer: What is the biggest reward of life as a travel writer?

Cynthia: I sometimes go to luxury resorts to write stories about the area. Of course I'm kidding (laughs). You see, I've watched the sunrise on the Pacific coast and seen the Grand Canyon under a full moon. I saw fascinating sights in these places, the views. But most valuable is the incredible generosity and the spirit of the people I've met on my routes. It's the biggest blessing to have a glimpse into their lives. This is what makes me stay in my business.

Speaker A

Even with the falling Euro, getting around Europe, to my mind, can still be fairly expensive, especially if you're travelling long distances or miss out on that killer fare from Ryanair. I sometimes get sick to my stomach at how much transportation can cost even for short distances. But, despite the high valued Euro, high transportation costs, and general expensiveness of Europe, there are still some ways to travel around.

Speaker B

Busabout is a hop-on/hop-off bus service similar to the Oz experience in Australia that is primarily used by backpackers. You can get on and off whenever you want along one of their set routes. Then, you can buy tickets that let you travel their whole network with a set number of stops. For example, you can buy a 9-day bus pass which gives you 9 stops from your starting city. Those stops can be wherever you want, for as long as you want.

Speaker C

Budget airlines are by far the cheapest option for getting around Europe for me. They're so prolific that competition helps keep fares cheap. You can find tickets where the fare is just the taxes. Companies like Transavia or EasyJet offer mind-blowingly cheap flights across Europe. Just remember to book at least a month early to scoop up great deals. There are also regular sales, especially during the off season. Follow the rules and travel cheap.

Speaker D

The best organization for international bus travel for me is Eurolines, and it'll take you across Europe. Every country has its own bus service but for international trips I usually choose Eurolines. Well, in Europe, buses are cheaper than trains. The downside to bus travel is that instead of a roomier train, you're cramped on a tiny bus. For this reason, I tend to pay a bit more and travel by train but if you have to save up, buses are the way to go.

Speaker E

The best way to travel for cheap is not to pay for it at all. Hitchhiking is quite common in Europe and I've met a number of travellers who have done it. I myself travelled this way in Bulgaria. It was really cool! But, of course, it's important to use your head when hitchhiking. Just because someone stops doesn't mean you need to get in their car! Alternatively, there are websites where you can ask for rides so long as you pitch in for gas.

Speaker F

The cheapest way to travel around Europe is by bus or budget airline, but what it really comes down to is planning — the earlier you book your bus, plane or train ticket the cheaper it will be. Last-minute or high speed train and bus fares are double what they cost during early bookings. Ryanair fares can go from 1 pound to 50 pounds in a day. So, the key to travelling around Europe cheaply is planning. Plan, book in advance, and save!

Bob: Mum? I'm back!

Mum: Hi darling! How was school?

Bob: Not bad. Actually, it was great!

Mum: And what made it 'great'?

Bob: Our biology teacher. She said that next class is going to be a field trip to a Mystic Aquarium, which is very large and has all kinds of animals, birds and reptiles.

Mum: That sounds terrific! I've been there with your dad once. I can still remember how excited I was when I learned that the parrot I was holding could repeat after me!

Bob: Wow! What about dad? Was he impressed?

Mum: Believe me, he was. But not with parrots. The aquarium has a live event several times a day. We visited the one with a beluga contact program. Your dad was brave enough to get into the water with the beluga whales. He was fit for the adventure and then he stood next to them and heard them vocalize and breath. He even touched their tongue!

Bob: You're kidding!

Mum: I'm not! You'll love it.

Bob: I'm not going to swim with them. They're too big and too scary for me. I'm looking forward to the tanks with the fish. Our teacher says that they're dimly lit and... and they are endless, and that are filled with every kind of fish that I can think of.

Mum: She's right. Moreover, the aquarium also has a few outside displays in round water tanks that you can look over and actually see the animals jump. The best thing about these tanks is the fact that you can actually touch their backs.

Bob: I'd love to hold a baby alligator and have my picture taken with it.

Mum: If I'm not mistaken, you'd be able to. There are several booths where you can hold an animal and get a photo of the event. I'll give you some money.

Bob: Thank you! I also heard that there's a hidden amazon exhibit that includes snakes, bats, frogs, lizards, plants, piranhas, tarantulas and birds.

Mum: Yes, it's a wonderful nature walk with hand rails and benches to rest if needed. The scenery is absolutely beautiful, and you are able to see how the wildlife live.

Bob: The teacher says that the ticket agent will stamp your ticket so you can go back the following two days for free. Can you go with me? Ple-e-ase?

Mum: Bob, you know that I need to plan it in advance. Your next class is on Wednesday, isn't it?

Bob: Actually, it's on Thursday. But I know we can't make it on Friday, can we?

Mum: We'll both be busy that day. Let's try Saturday.

Bob: Great! Thanks, Mum!

Presenter: Good morning everybody and welcome to our program "The world around us"! Today we are talking with Michael Farrey, a physicist at George Town University, about time and a history of timekeeping devices. Hello Michael, it's a pleasure to see you today, thanks for coming.

Speaker: Morning everyone! I'm so happy to be here with all of you on such a special day. Today we are celebrating the 300 year anniversary of Carl Linnaeus's birth.

Presenter: Michael, if I'm not mistaken Carl Linnaeus was a Swedish botanist and zoologist and his scientific research wasn't connected with physics or clocks.

Speaker: Molly, you are right and wrong at the same time. It's true that he devoted his life to collection and classification of plants, animals and minerals and now he is thought to be the father of modern taxonomy and ecology. However Linnaeus also made use of his knowledge while constructing the first floral or... flower clock. Look, I have a picture of a modern floral clock with me.

Presenter: Oh, I see. It's really beautiful, though I don't see the clock!

Speaker: Yeah, you know, flower clocks are not just a large decorative clock with the clock face made of flowers and two arrows in the centre, like the ones in major cities today. Real Linnaeus floral clocks do not have that circle shape and you don't need arrows to tell time. Being a botanist he took advantage of several plants that open or close their flowers at particular times of the day to accurately indicate the time. Having studied them from around 1731 to 1750, he finally proposed the concept in 1751. He may never have planted such a garden, but the idea appealed to several botanical gardens and they tried to construct floral clocks in the early 19th century, but with no great success.

Presenter: Why? Was it difficult to find flowers and plant them?

Speaker: Well, the accuracy of such a clock is highly affected by weather and seasonal conditions. Look, we are in the middle of May, but the average daytime temperature is below 15 °C, so most of the flowers that are normally in blossom still haven't come into bloom. Moreover, Linnaeus based his measurements on flowering times in the city where he lived. So, many of the plants given in his list do not flower at the same season in other places.

Presenter: It's a pity we can't construct such a floral clock in our park. I think it would inspire many people today.

Speaker: Actually, Andrew Marvell was so amazed at the beauty of the clock that he even described it in his poem called 'The Garden' some 30 years before Linnaeus' death.

He wrote:

Of flow'rs and herbs this dial new;
Where from above the milder sun
Does through a fragrant zodiac run;
And, as it works, th' industrious bee
Computes its time as well as we.
How could such sweet and wholesome hours
Be reckoned but with herbs and flow'rs!

Presenter: Fantastic! Unfortunately our time's up. We'll be back in a week with our last program for this month. Michael, thank you for coming!

Speaker: My pleasure!

Speaker A

Television has always been a very good source of information for my family and me. Of course, I've heard about lots of people who have ended up wearing glasses and developing eye problems. But as far as I'm concerned, I don't think watching your favourite movies and shows for a short duration at an acceptable distance from the television screen is bad for anyone. TV is also a potential source of valuable information. And it's fun!

Speaker B

I think it's hard to control children watching TV as they tend to watch cartoons continuously on cartoon channels. It's very important that we restrict the watching time for children rather than adults. Children should be encouraged to read books and play indoor and outdoor games in their free time. For the older ones it's better to tell about bad consequences of watching TV too much and the importance of studying and socializing with friends.

Speaker C

I feel television is a safer source of information when we compare it with the Internet. This is because of the harmful radiation computers give out as compared to television even when watching for a short time. Although computers with online applications are more popular than television for educational and entertainment purposes, I would prefer watching movies, news and other shows on my TV for a longer time than on a computer.

Speaker D

I believe there is a problem in today's world with heavy television use. I think people spend too much time sitting on a couch instead of being physically active. So television is a great contributor to the obesity problem worldwide. Heavy television use isn't helpful also because people are killing time when they could be reading a book or mingling with friends. That's why the only time I watch TV during the day is right before bed.

Speaker E

Television is only a problem if you make it one. Television plays an important role in both my life and the life of my family. It's not only a form of entertainment, but something that is very helpful in staying in touch with your family. It is a form of bonding with each other, and because we watch much television and only have one in the house, we watch it together while spending time as a family. Our TV room is a place of regular family gatherings.

Speaker F

We often argue about TV programmes to watch as we all love different things. Whenever my dad isn't working, he mostly spends his time watching the Sunday soccer games, his passion. My grandma, of course, can't go a day without watching some form of soap operas, or novellas as we call them, my sister just loves to watch anything, and my mom, well, she is with soap operas too. I personally enjoy watching TV shows for teens.

Dave: Mary, darling, what do you think of going to Disneyland this Christmas?

Mary: Our kids would be more than happy, Dave. But we need to decide which one we'd like to visit, where to stay, how to get there and much more.

Dave: You're right. I've made a search on the Net and found out that Walt Disney World, in Orlando Florida, is the only "World" in a set of "Disneylands" around the globe. Its territory is enormous with many theme parks and shopping/entertainment zones.

Mary: I've heard of it. It's the one which was built over decades, starting with The Magic Kingdom which opened in 1971. Right?

Dave: Amazing, how do you know?

Mary: Jim did a project on it last month. He was so busy with his chemistry project that he didn't have time for this one. So, I decided to help and did a little research for him. And, as you know, I have a wonderful memory of facts and figures. Anyway, do you want to visit Disneyland on Christmas Eve?

Dave: Well, it might be better to go there between Thanksgiving and Christmas as it's a top time to visit Disney World. The parks will be decorated for Christmas, but they won't be crowded. But, Lesly might be a bit disappointed because at this period the Magic Kingdom closes early some nights, and the weather may be too cool for the water parks.

Mary: We'll deal with Lesly when we're there. She's a bit eccentric but I know what to do. I think that she'll be happy to know that some parks will probably be open until midnight, and there is a lot of fun after dark. I'm sure she'll enjoy a special night parade, fireworks, and shows that only happen when the park is open late.

Dave: Darling, you know more than me!

Mary: Oh, thank you! The only thing I'm not sure about is the weather. As you said it may be too cool for water rides, but won't it be too cold in general? Or too rainy? Could there be thunderstorms or hurricanes?..

Dave: Mary, calm down. Hurricanes are rarely a problem, because Orlando is inland. As for the rain, we can bring plastic ponchos, or buy Mickey ponchos on the spot. We can also stay in the hotel just by the park and leave the park whenever we want and return when the weather gets better.

Mary: Ok, Dave. You're right as ever!

Presenter: Good afternoon ladies and gentlemen. You're listening to our Sunday programme "Fit and Fab" where we are talking with fit and fabulous people from all over the world. And here with us, Lindsey James. Welcome Lindsey!

Speaker: Good afternoon, Nick! Good afternoon everyone. Happy to be here!

Presenter: Lindsey, a 47-year-old Japanese-born managing director, is also a fan of the Mahabharata. It's one of the two major Sanskrit epics of ancient India. Being impressed with Arjuna, the hero and skilled archer in the story, Lindsey took archery lessons 7 years ago. In 2007 she opened a café with an archery range in Scotland, called the Arjuna. The café serves vegetarian food 24/7. So, Lindsey, tell us what do you do to keep fit?

Speaker: You know, I think I don't do much. However, for 1,5 hours every day, I work out at my local gym or in the hotel gym if I'm overseas. For an hour on some evenings I swim in the pool, using flippers and aquatic fitness gloves to train various muscle groups. And I play golf with my friends about twice a month... well, actually once a month.

Presenter: What sports did you do when you were young?

Speaker: Despite being a girl I was a huge Bruce Lee fan, so I picked up martial arts at 13. At 17, I started practising taekwon-do. I eventually achieved a black belt and got certified to teach. Throughout my 20s, believe it or not, I used to practice with a sword.

Presenter: Well, you weren't an ordinary girl. Has there ever been a time when you were not fit?

Speaker: To tell the truth, there's been such a time. When I was about 30, I started my own business. I had irregular meals, skipped lunch on some days and ate late at night. As the company started growing, I had to travel frequently. I ate out all the time. I didn't have time for sport and exercise and I put on 20 kg.

Presenter: What made you change your lifestyle then?

Speaker: It really hit me how much I had let myself go when I looked at photos of myself in my younger days. It encouraged me to start working out.

Presenter: What is your diet like?

Speaker: Nowadays I eat mostly organic fruits and vegetables and buy organic ingredients such as flour to cook them. I start the day with a milk shake before my morning workout in a gym. Afterwards, I have unsweetened muesli for breakfast. Lunch and dinner include various combinations of salads, grilled vegetables, beans and rice. I get hungry quickly, so I snack almost every hour on fruits and nuts. I don't believe in counting calories. To me, it's all about balancing one's input with output.

Presenter: Do you have little weaknesses?

Speaker: To tell the truth, I do. Once a week, I have a fun day when I eat whatever I want except junk food. 80 per cent dark chocolate, yoghurt, ice cream, pasta, etc.

Presenter: What is your secret to looking fabulous?

Speaker: I don't think I look fabulous. Bodies are built differently, so to me, it's not about one's weight or figure. It's more important to be healthy.

Вариант 20

Задание 1

Вы услышите 6 высказываний. Установите соответствие между высказываниями каждого говорящего A–F и утверждениями, данными в списке 1–7. Используйте каждое утверждение, обозначенное соответствующей цифрой, только один раз. В задании есть одно лишнее утверждение. Вы услышите запись дважды. Занесите свои ответы в таблицу. У Вас есть 20 секунд, чтобы ознакомиться с заданием.

Speaker A

I can't imagine my life without a library. Even though I'm not able to go to the library every day, I do go there quite often, mostly together with my sons. Our library has a special section for kids, and they have very competent people there who help my kids and many other kids with school assignments. My kids like the library also because they organize interesting activities and offer free courses, by the way, reading time for kids is our favourite.

Speaker B

Libraries are still very much an integral part of our society. Well, at first, they offer various programmes that can improve public literacy. Libraries also teach us responsibility, with the deadlines and fines got from checking out books. I know, some even volunteer hours for students in need of work experience. I've heard from my neighbour who needed a job that the library helped him to get one. All in all, libraries are important for us.

Speaker C

There're still many people in this country, and in the world, who can't afford tablets, computers, smart phones or laptops. Not everyone has Internet access to get their questions answered. And to be honest, I've seen many online books that require you to pay to be able to read them. Libraries give people who are economically struggling a way to find information and enjoy reading as much as anyone who can afford those devices.

Speaker D

In today's society, almost everything can be found online. Everything that a library does can be done online, and probably even faster. I know most of the people through their phones, laptops and iPads do almost everything, including reading books. They use their devices as an easy way to avoid hard work and do things fast. The modern technologies have more advantages, and to be honest, I don't think we need libraries so much.

Speaker E

I'm sure we need libraries. Many people prefer going to the library to study because of its comfort in silence rather than having a laptop at home, which is also a source of distraction. Personally, I love the feeling of a book in my hands and the library atmosphere. I also know that libraries are great for doing research work because it's, mostly, a calm environment, plus many have study rooms where one or a group can sign up to use them.

Speaker F

Libraries are the gates to the future. So it is unfortunate that around the world we observe local authorities seizing the opportunity to close libraries as an easy way to save money, without realising they are stealing from the future to pay for today. Instead of regarding libraries as obsolete, federal governments should increase funding for improved staffing and technology. Many libraries are in need of building reconstruction as well.

You have 15 seconds to complete the task. (Pause 15 seconds.)

Now you will hear the texts again. (Repeat.)

Задание 2

Вы услышите диалог. Определите, какие из приведённых утверждений A–G соответствуют содержанию текста (1 — True), какие не соответствуют (2 — False) и о чём в тексте не сказано, то есть на основании текста нельзя дать ни положительного, ни отрицательного ответа (3 — Not stated). Занесите номер выбранного Вами варианта ответа в таблицу. Вы услышите запись дважды. У Вас есть 20 секунд, чтобы ознакомиться с заданием.

Now we are ready to start.

Helen: Ok, Owen. What do we need for our project?

Owen: As far as I understand, we should decide on the top 5 places to visit in one of the former British colonies.

Helen: Hm, let me think. Canada, Australia, New Zealand, India, Pakistan... What else..?

Owen: That's more than enough. I know a lot about Canada, because my mum came from Toronto. I'm used to spending my summer holidays there or in Delhi, because my dad is from India. But honestly, for the project, these two are my least favourite options.

Helen: Well, my last project was devoted to Australia and I'm not particularly fond of Pakistan. Shall we consider New Zealand as an option?

Owen: Ok. Let's google it.

Helen: Look, this site recommends spending at least a day or two in Auckland, which is named one of the top 10 cities in the world by Lonely Planet. There are lots of museums, shops and restaurants.

Owen: Wellington is as interesting a city as Auckland with vibrant art scene, great food, and the Amazing Te Papa museum of New Zealand. It is a gorgeous and compact city with heaps of art and sport and food!

Helen: Ok. Let Auckland be number one on our list, and Wellington — number two. And...

Owen: ... and I've found our numbers three and four. The Waitomo Glow-worm Caves, which are naturally illuminated by thousands of glow-worms, are thought to be among the best places to go in New Zealand. And then, a really unique adventure — black-water rafting down an underground stream. It's written that it's pitch-dark (except for the glow-worms in the cave), and people do everything from jumping off waterfalls to rappelling down cave walls.

Helen: Great! I'd also prefer including some of the off-the-beaten track and less touristy places. Look what I've found: the West Coast of the South Island has one of the most beautiful drives with mountains, world heritage forests and glaciers. It's even possible to take one of the smaller overnight cruises for a real glimpse of what it would have been like to arrive in the country by boat 150 years ago. Also, some people suggest going to Stewart Island for birdlife and one of the few chances to see kiwi.

Helen: I agree ... I'd love it there ... Less people and lots of beautiful beaches, and birds, and wonderful places to eat. We would enjoy kiwi while watching the kiwi.

You have 15 seconds to complete the task. (Pause 15 seconds.)

Now you'll hear the text again. (Repeat.)

Задания 3–9

Вы услышите интервью. В заданиях 3–9 запишите цифру 1, 2 или 3, соответствующую выбранному Вами варианту ответа. Вы услышите запись дважды. У Вас есть 50 секунд, чтобы ознакомиться с заданиями.

Now we are ready to start.

Presenter: I'm here at the Writers' Conference in Ohio, with the novelist Anming Li. Thank you, Professor Li, for your willingness to interview.

Anming: Oh, it's lovely talking to you.

Presenter: When you write, what is your concept of a story?

Anming: For me, a story is connected to the human experience as lived through time. I'm particularly interested in the passage of time and all of its attendants such as memory, desire, prophecy, and fate. Time seems to be, for me, closely related to my understanding and expression of human experience through narrative.

Presenter: How do you choose the narrator?

Anming: Sometimes I'm able to reach for the narrator instinctively. Other times, I try perspectives of different characters. When I was learning to write, I noticed that I would often be able to tell a story quickly if I knew who was telling it, and yet it would take me three quarters of the time it took to draft the plot, just to figure out who the narrator was. In one novel, it took me two years to figure out who it would be.

Presenter: What do you think about the characters?

Anming: Mmm, what I see frequently is that writers don't want to let their characters get into trouble and they don't want to see them acting in an unattractive way. In life we try to avoid conflict. But conflict is essential for the story. As writers, we need to allow our characters to be in conflicting situations, to let them get into trouble.

Presenter: When you write a story, do you have a feeling of what is going to happen in the end?

Anming: Personally, I don't want to know the end when I start. The act of writing leads me to the point where it's got to end and sometimes that happens naturally and sometimes I artificially say "wait a minute, I've got to get out of this somehow. What's going on here?" But in many cases I let it be a bit of a surprise.

Presenter: What engages a reader in a story?

Anming: Well, you know, tastes differ. When I first started writing fiction, I had a clear idea that a reader would become engaged with a character who has something at risk. The character must want something and the writer must make it difficult to reach. I still think that's true. But I have read an amazing book where the narrator walks along the coast of England and describes the places he visits and what he's thinking about at each place. And even without risk, it was an extraordinarily engaging novel!

Presenter: What are the venues where we might enjoy your teaching?

Anning: I teach permanently at the Ohio Writers Workshop. That is very pleasurable for me because I get to work with people for up to a semester, and sometimes an entire year. I see most of the fiction writers in the program over a period of two or even three years. I also give free distant classes for people under 20 who can't come to Ohio for financial, family or other reasons, but who are diligent and gifted. For others there is a course fee.
